

EXPERT TO AUTHORITY SUMMIT 2026

Session Notes

Every session from the three days, written up for you: the ideas, the frameworks as they were taught, who said what, and the next step to take this week.

How to use these notes

These notes follow the summit in order, one session at a time. Each one opens with what the session gave you, then the key ideas, the frameworks exactly as the speaker taught them, and a short set of next steps.

Where a session was a conversation, the interviews with Marisa Peer and Regan Hillyer and the two VIP question-and-answer sessions, the notes are laid out as dialogue so you can see what was asked and what was answered, with each speaker named.

Quotes are the speakers' own words, lightly tidied for reading. Frameworks are reproduced in the speaker's order and wording; nothing has been added to them.

Why Most Experts Stay Invisible

In this opening session you got the big picture of the summit and the mindset that has to come before any marketing tactic. Vishen showed you the $20 Million Map he uses with every author he scales, told the story of how Bob Proctor challenged him to stop playing small, and then guided you live through the Three Most Important Questions so your business has a life-sized target to aim at, not just a revenue number.

KEY IDEAS

- The problem Vishen wants to fix: it is often not the best expert who gets recognised, but the expert who understands marketing. You are not invisible because you lack knowledge; you are invisible because you lack positioning, and the three days are built to give you a repeatable system for that positioning.
- The same process has worked across very different experts. Jim Kwik went from 50,000 to 2 million followers because Vishen's Superbrain ads asked people to follow him, and Superbrain sold $20 million a year as a single course. Marisa Peer's Uncompromised Life led to a $20 million a year hypnotherapy certification business. WildFit was blown up in four months (and took Vishen from 22% to 14% body fat). Regan Hillyer, Jeffrey Allen and Lifebook followed the same steps.
- The $20 Million Map: a simple purchase of $19 to $99 sits at the centre, fed by Meta and Google advertising, social media content above it and email writing below it. That product creates three connections - social followers, buyers and an email list. Done well this alone can reach $50,000 to $100,000; scaling content, ads and writing (now fast with AI) builds a following you drive to free content events like webinars and summits, and from there to high-end offers such as a 90-day transformation, one-on-one coaching, events and guilds (masterminds and group mentoring).
- Vishen's own start was small: he paid about $12,500 in 2002 to become one of roughly 100 Silva Method facilitators, taught 15 people at a time in a Holiday Inn on 59th Street in New York, took home $3,000 to $4,000 a weekend every three months, kept his day job, and stayed at that level for five years.
- The Bob Proctor lunch in London in 2008: Bob worked out that Vishen had flown 19 hours in coach, away from his one-year-old son, to earn about $5,000 from a $400 class. His words - think bigger, son - and his question, whether your goals are worthy of you, led Vishen to quit teaching Silva that weekend and within two years launch A-Fest in Costa Rica with 250 entrepreneurs paying $3,000 each.
- The Beautiful Destruction (a phrase from The Code of the Extraordinary Mind): sometimes you have to destroy what is merely good to let what is truly great enter. Most experts stay stuck because they never choose to grow, and if your work is genuinely valuable, staying small carries a real cost to every person you never reach. Choosing growth is an ethical obligation.

- Build the business as a vehicle for happiness, not just revenue. Three things make us happy - experiences, growth and meaning - and when Vishen optimised only one area (money, health or family time) another collapsed. In 2010, at a Lifebook event and with no following, he wrote goals like visiting 100 countries, becoming a top speaker, partying in the Mediterranean and winning an Emmy; A-Fest, a party in a Game of Thrones castle and a documentary that won two Daytime Emmys all followed. As Matthew McConaughey told him: the target attracts the arrow.
- The Three Most Important Questions work because they force end goals (experiences, growth, contribution) instead of means goals (credentials, titles, income). Jason Campbell wrote 'become a world-class speaker', stepped in for a cancelled speaker in Dubrovnik, won best speaker and now has a book and podcast; Ronan Diego wrote about TED talks and health, won the Viper Challenge, was flown to Paris to speak and became Mindvalley's most-watched teacher in 2021. Authority without balance is just a faster treadmill.

The $20 Million Map

1. Centre: a simple purchase priced $19 to $99.
2. Around it, three traffic drivers: advertising (Meta and Google), social media (your content strategy) and email (your writing strategy).
3. The simple product produces three connections with your audience: social media followers, buyers and an email list.
4. To go beyond $50,000 to $100,000, scale content, Meta and Google advertising and writing, which AI now makes fast.
5. Drive the following you build to content-based events: webinars or a free summit (with an optional small VIP upgrade).
6. From the event, drive people to high-end offers where the money is made: a 90-day transformation or one-on-one coaching.
7. A further tier of high-end: events and guilds (masterminds or group mentoring). A great expert business covers the whole spectrum.

The Three Most Important Questions (3MIQ)

1. Take a piece of paper and draw three columns: Experiences, Growth, Contribution.
2. Column 1, two minutes: the experiences you want - love and relationships, friendships, travel, adventure, the environments you live and work in.
3. Column 2, two minutes: to have those experiences, how do you need to grow - health and fitness, intellectual life, new skills, spiritual life, your expert-to-authority skills.
4. Column 3, two minutes: assuming you already have those experiences and that growth, how would you contribute - career, creative life, family, community.
5. Keep it to two minutes per column so the logical mind switches off and you write from the heart; later, sit in a cafe and go deeper at 20 minutes per column.
6. Put the finished page where you will see it - on your wall, or in your desk drawer if you would rather keep it private. This is your target.

"It is often not the best expert who gets recognized. It is the expert who understands marketing."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You're not invisible because you lack knowledge. You're invisible because you lack positioning."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Do not ask if you are worthy of your goals. Ask if your goals are worthy of you."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Staying small is a moral failure if your work is genuinely valuable. And there's a cost to invisibility, not just you, but to every person you never reached."

Vishen Lakhiani

"The target attracts the arrow. When I gave this mind the target, it's as if a thousand arrows started being launched. The right ideas, the right opportunities, all came to me."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Take a photo of the $20 Million Map slide. It will not fully make sense yet; it will click as the summit goes on.
- The Three Most Important Questions, live: on paper (not in the chat), draw three columns - Experiences, Growth, Contribution - and write as fast as you can for two minutes per column. After each column, share one item with the group and read what others wrote.
- In the next few days, go to a cafe and redo the exercise properly at 20 minutes per column. Then stick the page on your wall, or keep it in your desk drawer where you will see it every day.

Your next steps

1. Complete your full Three Most Important Questions this week (20 minutes per column) and put it somewhere you see daily.
2. Write down honestly where you are playing small right now, and ask whether your current goals are worthy of you.
3. Sketch your own version of the $20 Million Map: what is your $19 to $99 product, which of the three traffic drivers do you have, and what high-end offer do they lead to?
4. Decide one goal for your business that sits alongside a goal for your health, relationships or experiences, so the business serves your whole life.

INTERVIEW · MARISA PEER & VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

How Marisa Peer Built a $20M Coaching Business

In this conversation, Vishen Lakhiani sat down with therapist and author Marisa Peer to unpack how a one-on-one therapy practice became a global training organisation with 20,000 certified therapists. You saw the actual business model, from a free masterclass and a $199 programme through to a $15,000 year-long certification, and how each piece feeds the next. Marisa then turned to the inner game: why 'I'm not enough' is the belief that stops most experts, and the simple steps she uses to dissolve it.

KEY IDEAS

- Marisa runs four businesses: training therapists in her method (her main business, with 20,000 therapists trained worldwide), speaking internationally, writing books, and still seeing a small number of clients.
- The Mindvalley partnership began over dinner in Mexico after Marisa's husband John introduced her to Vishen. Vishen put her on stage, she was voted best speaker, and in 2015 they published Uncompromised Life, sold through a free 90-minute masterclass; it launched at around $1 to 2 million and was scaled with advertising to about $15 million. Her school opened in November of the same year, and many of its first students came from the Mindvalley audience.
- Your message matters more than your credentials. Traditional therapy's message is 'bring me your pain every week for years and the relationship will heal you'. Marisa replaced it with 'bring me your pain and I'll fix you in an hour', and every business with an emotive message does better than one without.
- Phraseology: Marisa did not call her work hypnotherapy, she coined RTT, Rapid Transformational Therapy. Great experts coin their own word, and it becomes part of their authority.
- The flywheel: leads arrive through a free masterclass, buy a $199 programme, are retargeted with ads, take a quiz on Marisa's site, receive a PDF about becoming an RTT therapist, and enrol in the $15,000 certification that takes nine months to a year. Every graduate then spreads the brand further.

- Ask 'What do I require, and what does what I require require of me?' Marisa did not need to write a book, she needed a bestselling book, which required cold-calling magazines and learning to speak on stage. Then do it, even if you do not want to.
- Self-doubt is learned, not innate, and it comes down to whether your brain feels safe, so feed it evidence that you are safe to show up, sell and be seen. The biggest belief holding experts back is 'I'm not enough', and most people also quit too early: about 80% want to write a book, 18% do, and under a quarter of one percent ever make money from it, because selling a book is more work than writing it and people expect instant success.
- Find your edge by looking at someone good and noticing what they do not do. Marisa spotted that Joe Dispenza did not help Steven Bartlett with his sugar habit on air, offered to hypnotise Steven on his show, and the episode got around 2.5 million views.

Marisa's front end and back end (as explained by Vishen)

1. Free 90-minute masterclass creates the desire to go deeper
2. Entry programme at $199 for people meeting Marisa for the first time
3. Retarget engaged students with advertising
4. Quiz on the RTT website, followed by a PDF explaining what it means to be an RTT therapist
5. Enrol in the $15,000 certification, which takes nine months to a year
6. Graduates multiply the brand, feeding the flywheel

Find your gift

1. Find your gift (look at what you loved doing between the ages of 7 and 14)
2. Perfect your gift
3. Share your gift with the world, and take it to the market

Marisa's process for moving past doubt

1. Ask yourself: do you like every person in the whole world? If not, why do you need everyone to like you?
2. Say to yourself: 'I like myself. I believe in myself. I have a gift, and I'm here to share it with the world.' This is the first signal to your brain that you are safe.
3. Define your gift, perfect it and take it to market, rather than waiting to feel ready
4. Notice that how you feel comes down to two things, the pictures in your head and the words you use, and use them to talk yourself into it, not out of it

What do I require?

1. Ask: what do I require?
2. Ask: what does what I require require of me?
3. Then do it, even if you do not want to

Finding your edge

1. Look at someone who is good in your field
2. Do not copy how good they are; notice the one thing they are not doing
3. Do that thing. It becomes your edge and your way in

THE CONVERSATION

- Vishen Lakhiani Marisa has a hypnotherapy school that teaches her method, RTT, and it does tens of millions a year certifying therapists. She is one of the most successful author brands I know, and Mindvalley had a big part in helping her get to that level. Marisa, tell us about your business and what you do.
- Marisa Peer Well, I do four things. My real business is training people to be phenomenal therapists. I think the old therapy model is dated, so I have a method, and I've trained 20,000 therapists all over the world. My second business is speaking all over the world, the third is writing books, and the fourth is that I still see clients, not many, but some.
- Vishen Lakhiani But when you started out, you were basically doing one-on-one, so can I share the story of how we met? Marisa would never attend my event, but her husband John loved Mindvalley events, and on the last day of an event in Mexico he found me in the lobby and said, 'Vishen, have you met my wife? She's one of the top therapists in England, come join us for dinner,' and over dinner I learned you'd been voted number one therapist in Tatler. So I put you on stage at the next event, you were voted best speaker, and we published Uncompromised Life together, sold through a masterclass; I launched it at something like one or two million, then we put advertising behind it and scaled it to 15 million. On the back end of that, what happened, because you and John built a huge coaching school?
- Marisa Peer One-on-one, yes. And we'd already started the school, but it all came out in the same year, 2015. I did my talk for you in September and my school started in November. A lot of the people who came to that school came from Mindvalley, so yes, we built a huge coaching business, and you really helped us get an even bigger name.
- Vishen Lakhiani Could you explain what the coaching business looked like?

Marisa Peer

I'd always been a therapist, and 40 years in I love it as much as I did on day one, but people would ring me from Alabama or Sydney wanting to work with someone like me, and there wasn't anyone, because it was my method and I was a bit possessive of it. My husband, who has put talent on stage his whole life, said, 'Darling, you have to teach this method; I'll find the school, the brochure and the clients, you just turn up,' and that is exactly what happened: my first school was at Regent's College in London, and people came from Guam, Australia and New Zealand looking for something fast. The message of therapy is 'bring me your pain every week for several years and the relationship will make you better,' so I wanted a different message: bring me your pain and I'll fix you in an hour, occasionally three sessions. Every business that tells an emotive message does better than one that doesn't.

Vishen Lakhiani

Could you give me an idea of what an emotive message is?

Marisa Peer

AT&T did it with E.T. and 'phone home' (when did you last phone home, while your mother sits on the sofa worried?), and MasterCard did it with Priceless; it's something emotional that tugs at your heartstrings. To be different you also have to be brave enough to put your head above the parapet: somebody wrote to me saying, 'How dare you call your business rapid? The word rapid should never go in front of therapy,' and when I asked why, the answer was 'just because,' which isn't true. We all have a gift, and you're put on the planet to find your gift, perfect your gift and share it with the world.

Vishen Lakhiani

There were a couple of things Marisa did from a marketing perspective that were really useful. One is what I call phraseology: everyone else calls it hypnotherapy, but Marisa coined her own phrase, RTT, Rapid Transformational Therapy, and great experts coin their own word. The second is that she had a front end and a back end: leads come in through a free 90-minute masterclass into a $199 programme like Uncompromised Life, and then Marisa uses advertising to retarget those people into her coaching school. You go to the website and take a quiz, is that right, then you get a PDF explaining what it means to be an RTT coach, and how much do they pay and how long is the training?

Marisa Peer

Yes, a quiz. It's $15,000, and the training takes between nine months and a year, depending on how much free time they have.

Vishen Lakhiani

So $15,000 and a year of training, and at the end she's given that person a beautiful new career. And here's the thing: through the thousands of people she has trained, Marisa is multiplying RTT and making her brand even more known. That's called a flywheel. Every little piece ties into the next, and that's how it becomes a massive business.

Marisa Peer

That's true, but we also teach marketing. So many people say, 'I'm good at my career, but nobody knows who I am.' Many therapists are empaths, they're good at the job but they don't know what marketing is, so we teach business in a box: who is your customer, what's your market, what's your message, where are they? One thing I learned a long time ago is to ask, what do I require, and what does what I require require of me? When I wrote my book, I didn't require to write a book, I required to write a bestselling book that changed lives, and that required something not easy: cold-calling magazines and learning to be a speaker. Then you do it, even if you don't want to.

Vishen Lakhiani

My question for you, Marisa, is for the people watching who are experiencing self-doubt or imposter syndrome, that feeling of 'I don't feel worthy of this.' What would be your advice for them? And is there a simple process you could give them to move away from that doubt?

Marisa Peer

None of you were born with that; there isn't a baby in the world who thinks 'I'm not worthy,' so you learned it somewhere, and if you learnt it, you can unlearn it. Everything comes down to one question, am I safe: when you say 'I'm scared you'll hate my book' you're telling your brain you're not safe and it will move you away, but you can signal 'I'm safe to go on stage, I'm safe to promote my business,' and because the brain always looks for evidence, you give it evidence. The simple process is this: ask yourself whether you like every person in the whole world, and if you don't, why do you care that everybody likes you; then start saying, 'I like myself, I believe in myself, I have a gift and I'm here to share it with the world.' Then define your gift, perfect it and take it to market, knowing your gift is connected to what you loved doing between the ages of 7 and 14, and remember that how you feel comes down to the pictures you make in your head and the words you construct, so use your brilliant brain to talk yourself into it rather than out of it.

Vishen Lakhiani

What do you think is the biggest belief that holds people back from becoming an authority in their field?

Marisa Peer

Definitely 'I'm not enough,' 100%. Your brain is not a mystery; the mystery is how you talk to yourself. Muhammad Ali said 'I'm the greatest' when factually he wasn't, but he stated it and embodied it and it became true, and Steven Bartlett says nobody came to his podcast for three years, but he loved it, so he kept going. And here's the thing I find most interesting: most people look at someone good and say, 'I'm going to be like them,' but the trick is to look at someone good and notice what they're not doing. I watched Steven tell Joe Dispenza he couldn't give up sugar and lived in a mess, and Joe just carried on, so I called Steven and said, 'I should come on your show and hypnotise you.' He said yes, it got about 2.5 million views, and that one thing they don't do becomes your edge.

“So I wanted to have a different message, which was very much, bring me your pain, and I'll fix you in an hour.”

Marisa Peer

“So always ask yourself this question, what do I require, and what does what I require require of me?”

Marisa Peer

“And if you learnt it, you can unlearn it. If you acquired it, you can unacquire it”

Marisa Peer

“The trick is to look at someone good and notice what they're not doing.”

Marisa Peer

“This is called phraseology. Great teachers, great experts coin their own word.”

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- The safety statement: Say to yourself, out loud and regularly: 'I like myself. I believe in myself. I have a gift, and I'm here to share it with the world.' Marisa describes this as the first signal to your brain that it is safe to show up.
- Trace your gift: Write down what you loved doing between the ages of 7 and 14. Marisa says your gift lies directly behind and is connected to those activities.

Your next steps

1. Write your message in one emotive sentence, the way Marisa replaced 'years of weekly sessions' with 'bring me your pain and I'll fix you in an hour', and test whether it tugs at the heart rather than describing a process.
2. Coin your own phrase for your method (your version of RTT) instead of using the generic name for your field.
3. Sketch your own front end and back end: what is the free experience, what is the entry-level offer, and what is the deeper programme that leads run into?
4. Pick one expert you admire, list the one thing they are not doing, and decide how that becomes your edge.

KEYNOTE · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

Your Signature Method

This session showed you what turns a good teacher into a recognised authority: a named, memorable method that creates transformation rather than just learning. Vishen told the story of losing the Silva Method business and how writing The Code of the Extraordinary Mind taught him the science of phraseology, then gave you the five practices of transformation that Mindvalley builds into every course, seminar and even physical product.

KEY IDEAS

- Vishen's second Beautiful Destruction: in 2014 the Silva Method, 25% of Mindvalley's revenue and a $5 million business he had built over ten years, was taken from him in a court case he could not win. He handed it over, laid off 18 people, and a book marketer who refused to refund a $10,000 fee told him to write a book instead. The first chapter took six months; the final chapter (later made into an Emmy-winning film) took one day. When you understand the process, it gets easier and easier.
- That book, The Code of the Extraordinary Mind, earned an $800,000 advance, hit the New York Times list, and every buyer of the $13 to $23 book went on to spend around $550 on Mindvalley products. It led to the course Be Extraordinary, still the highest-rated on Mindvalley nine years on, and five years later the Silva family asked Vishen to become the face of the Silva Method, now Mindvalley's best-selling programme. The lesson: the universe had been whispering 'you should be teaching' for years before it forced the issue.
- Phraseology is the science behind the book's success. Each of its ten chapters is a word or phrase Vishen coined and made memorable: culturescape, bullshit rules, consciousness engineering, models of reality, systems for living, bend reality, blissipline, unfuckwithable, Live Your Quest, plus the bonus Six Phase Meditation that became its own book. In November 2017 the book hit number one across all of Amazon, briefly overtaking the combined works of Tolkien. Marisa Peer's Rapid Transformational Therapy is phraseology in exactly the same way.
- Vishen engineered the book to be sticky. He dropped the introduction and celebrity foreword (bullshit rules) and opened with 'Before you begin: no, this is not your typical book' and five reasons it was unique. He wrote his own introduction using idea collision - the Dalai Lama and shots of vodka smashed together so you have to keep reading - and told readers the book adds more than 20 new words to English. Amazon only counts a book as read past page 11, and his readers got there while other free Kindle books were dropped by page 7 or 8.
- Don't create learning, create transformation. You forget 80% of a book within 24 hours, but transformation is the acceptance of a new meaning schema (University of Toronto): a mind once expanded can never shrink back. After WildFit, Vishen went from 22% to 14% body fat and has stayed there for ten years because he can never eat unhealthily again; after Lifebook you can never again set goals in only one of life's 12 categories.
- Transformation is an identity shift. Using James Clear's Atomic Habits, there are three ways to set a goal: outcome (lose 5 kilograms), process (gym three times a week, high-intensity interval training) and identity (I have the body of an athlete and my body needs to move). Outcome goals fail on cold, tired days and process slips from three sessions to two, but identity just is. Most people stop at outcome, better teachers stop at process, great teachers shift identity.
- The 5 Practices of Transformation are the ingredient list Mindvalley uses for every course, seminar and this summit: critical reflection, critical study and writing, social discourse, rate of application and altered states. Vishen showed how the summit had already used four of them: the Bob Proctor story and 3MIQ made you question whether your goals are big enough (reflection), he insisted you write on paper (writing), he had you share one goal in the chat (discourse), and he made you do it right then and stick it on your wall (application). Peer-reviewed studies link reflective writing to stress resilience, stronger immunity and emotional wellness.

- The practices apply beyond online courses. Marisa Peer's Uncompromised Life (around $25 to $30 million from one course) uses all five, including a hypnotherapy on money blocks delivered in the course with sound technology, fixing in one session what others stretch into 20-session packages. A Harv Eker seminar ran reflection, writing, partner discussion, a commitment and visualisations in one sequence. For a physical product, Vishen's supplement brand uses a free educational e-book with an interactive self-assessment, and designs the product for daily use to raise rate of application; three of the five was enough, and a free e-book once lifted sales 96% overnight.

Phraseology (how The Code of the Extraordinary Mind was made sticky)

1. Give each core idea or chapter its own coined word or phrase and make it memorable (culturescape, consciousness engineering, blissipline, unfuckwithable, Live Your Quest).
2. Drop the standard introduction and foreword; open with 'Before you begin' and the reasons this book is unlike others.
3. Write your own introduction using idea collision: smash two unlikely ideas together (the Dalai Lama and vodka) so the reader has to know what happens next.
4. Get the reader past page 11, the point at which Amazon counts a book as read.
5. Announce the new vocabulary up front so readers want to discover it: 'this book contributes more than 20 new words to the English language'.

Outcome, Process, Identity (from James Clear's Atomic Habits)

1. Outcome: the result you want (lose 5 kilograms). Easiest to abandon when you are cold or tired.
2. Process: the routine (gym three times a week, high-intensity interval training). Better, but slips when life gets busy.
3. Identity: who you are (I have the body of an athlete, my body needs to move). No longer a habit, it just is. Great teachers move students all the way here.

The 5 Practices of Transformation

1. Critical reflection: get the audience to examine an assumption about the world and shift it.
2. Critical study and writing: have them apply the idea by studying it and writing it down on paper, not just typing.
3. Social discourse: bring students together to talk to each other about what they learned.
4. Rate of application: get them to act immediately, not tomorrow.
5. Altered states: use meditation, hypnotherapy, breathwork or guided visualisation to embed the change.

“Sometimes the universe will punch you in the gut if you're too stubborn to realize something it's been trying to whisper to you.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Phraseology was a big part of what made the Code of the Extraordinary Mind so sticky.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“A mind once transformed is a mind expanded, and once that mind expands, it can never again shrink back to its original size.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Most people stop at outcome. Better teachers stop at process. Great teachers shift identity.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Rate of application, do not ask them to do it tomorrow. Get them to take action now.”

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Take a photo of the 5 Practices of Transformation slide. This is your design map for your course, event or product.
- Ask yourself honestly: are you applying this? Go through critical reflection, critical study and writing, social discourse, rate of application and altered states for whatever you teach, and note which are missing. Even a fitness coach can read a guided visualisation.
- Look at the phraseology page Vishen shared from the back of his book and notice how each chapter is a coined phrase; start listing the words and phrases that are uniquely yours.

Your next steps

1. Audit your current course, programme or event against the five practices and add the one or two you are missing this week.
2. Write down the system you already run with clients and give each step a name in your own words - the beginning of your phraseology.
3. Rewrite one lesson or session so it ends with an immediate action the student takes right then, not homework for tomorrow.
4. If you sell a product, draft the outline of a free educational e-book that helps customers reflect on their problem before they buy.

Why You're Likely Selling to the Wrong Audience

This session gave you the marketing lesson Vishen says changed everything for him: market sophistication. Through 125 years of Gillette advertising, Mindvalley's own websites and a worked leadership-coaching example, you learned the five levels a market moves through, how to tell which level yours is at, and why leading with a benefit in a crowded market is the reason many experts are not getting sales.

KEY IDEAS

- Understanding market sophistication is what let Vishen create the very first masterclass webinar in 2008, for a product called Quantum Jumping. That one masterclass did a million dollars in a month, because he finally understood he had been selling to the wrong audience - or more precisely, at the wrong level.
- Dollar Shave Club turned a simple idea (razors by mail, cheaper than Gillette) into a billion-dollar company with one founder-led video. When it grew too fast, could not ship on time, raised prices and investors fired the founder who was the face of the brand, the company tanked. Two lessons: deliver on your promise, and every founder needs to be the spokesperson for their product.
- The five levels through Gillette: Level 1 (1903) was a new product with no competition, so the ad simply led with the benefit - 'Shave yourself' - and sold over a million razors. Level 2, once competitors copied it, stacked a second benefit: shave yourself, look good and find a mate. Level 3 introduced a mechanism, the safety razor, with ads of a baby being shaved. Level 4 kept stacking mechanisms - the Twinjector with Telly Savalas, then lubricating strips, Fusion and ProGlide, like the car cup holder everyone had to add. Level 5 is emotion and identity: the 'best a man can get' campaign never even shows a razor.
- The headline rule flips with market maturity. In an early market your headline is the benefit and the mechanism is the sub-headline; in a later market you lead with the method or mechanism and the benefit becomes the sub-headline. Mindvalley's 2003 Silva site led with 'Why do some people have it all while others stumble and crawl?' and did millions; today's meditation site leads with 'Meditation was never supposed to make you calm, it was supposed to make you unshakable' and the words performance meditation engineered.
- Most experts in the room are selling at Level 1 or 2 - a benefit - to an audience that already knows the benefits of coaching, meditation or leadership training. If there is a lot of competition, the competition has already educated the market, and you need to be at Level 3 or 4 answering the question: how is your coaching different?
- The leadership-coaching walk-through: 'Become a confident leader' worked 20 years ago but a thousand programmes now say it. Level 2 adds a benefit: stay confident even in the midst of chaos. Level 3 names a mechanism: learn the LEAD model by McClellan. Level 4 stacks mechanisms: the LEAD model enhanced with scenario simulations, personalised feedback and guided rehearsal. Level 5 (Great leaders think differently, like Apple's Think Different) is for big companies and most experts can skip it.
- Your phraseology is how you move up in a competitive market. The Code of the Extraordinary Mind was not '10 mindset tips for a better life' but question the rules, consciousness engineering and the six-phase meditation. Marisa Peer's Rapid Transformational Therapy for Abundance stood out because it is a mechanism. Lifebook's old site led with the benefit 'Design your best life'; the new one goes straight to the mechanism, an AI-driven proven system.
- The exercise: write five versions of your product headline, one for each level of sophistication, then choose the level your market is actually at. Stage 1 to 2 lead with benefit, stage 3 to 4 lead with mechanism, stage 5 builds an identity association - and for most of you the honest answer is Level 3 or 4.

The 5 Levels of Market Sophistication

1. Level 1: a new product with little competition. Lead with the single benefit (Gillette 1903: 'Shave yourself').
2. Level 2: competition arrives saying the same thing. Stack on a second benefit (shave yourself and look good).
3. Level 3: everyone has the benefit. Introduce a mechanism - a unique process or technology (the safety razor, the LEAD model).
4. Level 4: competitors copy the mechanism. Stack more mechanisms and up the technology (Twinjector, Fusion, ProGlide; LEAD plus simulations, feedback and rehearsal).
5. Level 5: mechanisms stop making sense to buyers. Big businesses shift to emotion and identity association (Gillette's 'best a man can get', Apple's Think Different). Most experts do not need this level.

How the headline flips with market maturity

1. Early market (Levels 1 to 2): headline is the benefit, sub-headline is the mechanism.
2. Later market (Levels 3 to 4): headline is the method or mechanism, sub-headline is the benefit.
3. Level 5: establish an identity association for your customer.

"You must know the sophistication level of your audience before you write a single word of your copy, or your email, or your blog post, or your positioning statement."

Vishen Lakhiani

"In an early market, your headline starts with the benefit, and the mechanism is the sub-headline. In a later market, you lead with the method or the mechanism. The benefit is the sub-headline."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You must ask yourself honestly, how much competition is there? And if there's a lot of competition, the competition has educated the market."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Don't bring in benefit into a battle. It's like taking a knife to a gunfight."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You must know your mechanism, your phraseology for that mechanism, your system, your process, and that's when you start standing out."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Take a picture of the five-levels slide, then look at your own product and write down five versions of it - one headline for each level of market sophistication. You can skip Level 5 unless you are in a very competitive field such as a medical or health solution.

- Ask yourself honestly how much competition you have. If there is a lot, the market is already educated, and your version should lead with the mechanism (Level 3 or 4), not the benefit.

Your next steps

1. Write the five headline versions for your main offer this week and identify which level your market is really at.
2. Rewrite your current headline and sub-headline in the right order for that level: benefit first if you are early, mechanism first if the market is crowded.
3. Name your mechanism - the method, process or system behind your work - so you have something to lead with at Level 3 or 4.
4. Check the last email or post you sent: if it only promised a benefit your audience already knows, redraft it around how your approach is different.

KEYNOTE · JOHN LEE · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

How to Go from Leads to Customers

John Lee, entrepreneur, investor and author of the New York Times bestseller Money Unlocked, compressed twenty years of building multi-million businesses into a whiteboard tour of how attention becomes revenue. You saw the four ways to bring people with a problem to your solution, the ladder from unknown to authority, and a rapid-fire set of monetisation mechanisms he uses today, from bottom-of-funnel content and comment automation to AI avatars, an AI clone of his own brain and the seven-figure funnel. The thread through all of it: if you want to make more money, make more offers.

KEY IDEAS

- There are four ways to get the people who have a problem to come to you for the solution: free and organic content (people buy why you do it, so demonstrate your mechanism, like his Chinese medicine client Ian Clough whose 'slapping' videos hit 1.4, 3.2 and 5 million views), paid content once you know what works, affiliates (get every customer posting about your product) and Strategic Alliance Partners, where you borrow another brand's audience, as John did by partnering with Mindvalley and speaking at Tony Robbins' 12,500-person event in Sydney.
- Expert to authority is a ladder: unknown, known, expert, authority. To become known you must own one word (John's is monetisation; MrBeast's is entertainment), and to become the authority you need to be seen everywhere. His book Money Unlocked, published by Hay House and a New York Times bestseller, is the mechanism ('unlocked') that moved him up the ladder. The bridge between expert and authority is positioning: keynotes to 2,500 to 3,000 people, radio interviews, stages and webinars all count.

- Content splits into TOF, MOF and BOF (top, middle and bottom of funnel). Top-of-funnel gets millions of views but not money; bottom-of-funnel talks directly to your ideal client, gets few views and converts. His 23-second Facebook video about installing AI marketing infrastructure drew 21,000 comments from people wanting exactly that. Likes and followers do not pay the bills; specificity and interest marketing do.
- The number one rule: if you want to make more money, you need to make more offers, at least one offer a month. Most people do not lack something good to sell, they are scared of selling it. Every business monetises in one of three ways: product-based, service-based, or brand deals and sponsorship (a friend licensed his podcast for $100 million). When someone says they have a cash-flow problem, they actually have a marketing problem.
- The David Chen Method: to prove results come from topic rather than accolades, John created a fictitious grandfather figure, David Chen, as an AI avatar. His videos hit 263,000, 697,000 and 1.2 million views and pulled 2,000 to 7,000 comments each, promoting John's book. His ex-wife character Diana Carter outperforms him. You can build this yourself by dropping a photo and your products into an image model, then using Windsor.ai to find your best-performing content, script new posts and publish them.
- The comment guard, run on ManyChat: end every post with 'if you want to learn more, comment the word guide / book / learn', and the tool automatically sends a direct message with a link. One post drew 1,718 comments, another 10,000, and he has generated over 100,000 automated messages. Comments also boost your reach. He calls this raise-your-hand marketing, and it rests on his DEALS idea: the deals are literally inside the leads, leads come from exposure, and the easiest exposure is social media.
- Three more conversion events: webinar domination (a one-hour webinar with a book-a-call invitation bolted on the end, and consultants should run one on each of five topics); the three Cs of connection, community and collaboration, which matter more as people distrust AI content (his Telegram channel has 8,869 subscribers but individual messages reach 38,000 to 52,000 views, and Instagram now has built-in communities under Messages, Start Community); and IRL events, which he runs 200 of a year using TLC, Traffic to Leads to Customers: market, invite to the event, add massive value, invite again.
- AI qualification and personalised scale: an AI voice or chat agent (he demoed one built in SalesFunnels.io) can speak 50 languages, make outbound calls, qualify leads and hand off to a human the moment buying questions start. He also cloned his own brain at johnlee.ai, fed by a wearable recorder that transcribes everything he says; it holds 15,000 conversations a month, answers as he would (ask it about followers and it gives the 116 strategy: one topic, one platform, post every day for six months), then offers a sign-up link. Finally, the seven-figure sales funnel: social media to a sales page to a payment gateway, a free giveaway to capture name, email and phone, automated email sequences because it takes 23 touchpoints before someone buys, and retargeting everyone who hits your page. He sends about a million emails a month with offers.

The four ways to bring people to your solution

1. Free and organic content that shows what you stand for and demonstrates your mechanism
2. Paid content, once you know which organic content works
3. Affiliates: get your existing customers posting about your product
4. Strategic Alliance Partners (SAPs): partner with bigger brands to borrow their brand and audience

The expert to authority ladder

1. Unknown: nobody knows who you are
2. Known: people have now heard you, usually through a Strategic Alliance Partner
3. Expert: you own one word people come to you for
4. Authority: you are seen everywhere, with positioning (books, stages, media, webinars) as the bridge from expert

TOF, MOF, BOF content

1. Top of funnel: broad content that gets millions of views but does not convert
2. Middle of funnel
3. Bottom of funnel: content that speaks directly to your ideal client, gets fewer views and converts; end it with a comment prompt

John's ways to go from leads to customers (as taught, in order)

1. Bottom-of-funnel content
2. The David Chen Method: an AI avatar that makes offers for you
3. The comment guard with ManyChat
4. Webinar domination: one-hour webinar plus a book-a-call invitation
5. The three Cs: connection, community, collaboration
6. AI call qualification with a human in the loop
7. Chat agent qualification: a chat version of your cloned brain
8. IRL events using TLC: Traffic, Leads, Customers
9. Strategic Alliance Partners, prospected with an AI research and outreach tool
10. The seven-figure sales funnel

DEALS

1. To make money you need deals (customers)
2. The deals are in the leads
3. To get more leads you need exposure
4. The easiest exposure is social media, so keep posting content with a comment guard

The 116 strategy

1. One topic
2. One platform
3. Post every single day for six months

The seven-figure sales funnel

1. Social media drives people to a sales page connected to a payment gateway such as Stripe
2. Give something away for free in exchange for first name, last name, email and telephone number
3. Automated email sequences, because it takes 23 touchpoints before someone buys (the fortune is in the follow-up)
4. Build a custom audience from everyone who hits your page and retarget them on social media

"If you want to make more money, you need to make more offers. That's it."

John Lee

"Most people have a voice like Mariah Carey, but no one's ever heard you sing before."

John Lee

"Likes don't pay the bills, followers don't pay the bills, specificity, interest marketing and interest media are what pay the bills."

John Lee

"When people say to me they have a cash flow problem, I say, no, you don't, you have a marketing problem."

John Lee

"The definition of millionaire is to have touched a million lives before you have left this planet."

John Lee

TRY THIS

- Write down: 'The best known beats the best.'
- Take a photo of 'If you want to make more money, you need to make more offers', post it on social media tagging John, Vishen Lakhiani, Jason and Mindvalley, then print it and put it up around your house.

- Answer for yourself: what is your word? What is the one word you are going to own and post about?
- Write down the three Cs: connection, community, collaboration.
- Write down: 'The fortune is in the follow-up.'
- Pick one concept from this session, post about it on social media tagging John, Vishen and Jason, and stick to it. The host echoed this: choose one strategy and go deep rather than trying all of them at once.

Your next steps

1. Decide the one word you want to own and make it the topic of everything you post, following the 116 strategy: one topic, one platform, every day for six months.
2. Film one short bottom-of-funnel video that speaks directly to your ideal client and ends with 'comment the word ___ to learn more', then set up a ManyChat automation to send the link.
3. Put one offer on the calendar for this month, for example a one-hour webinar on your core topic with a book-a-call invitation at the end.
4. Sketch your funnel: a free giveaway that captures name, email and phone, and a short automated email sequence so nobody who shows interest is left without follow-up.

KEYNOTE · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

How to Craft a Winning Speech

To close Day 1, Vishen Lakhiani shared the formula Mindvalley uses internally to build talks, reverse-engineered from audience ratings on more than 200 speeches at Mindvalley University. You learned the six elements that separate a 4.9-rated talk from the 4.3 average, packaged as the IMPACT method, and saw how Vishen used every one of them in his own opening session that morning. You left with homework: write down the IMPACT of one talk you could give.

KEY IDEAS

- Where the data comes from: Mindvalley University is a 14-day event where 1,000 to 2,000 people move to a city together, producing hundreds of talks that the audience rates in an app. Analysing over 200 talks showed that top speakers score around 4.9 while the average hovers around 4.3, and that gap decides how often you are invited back, what you can charge and how many leads you get.
- Six themes appeared in every top-rated talk, in this order: here's a moment I was broken; here's the thing I had backwards; here's what I discovered; now let me show you, not tell you; here's the proof; and here's why you're already closer than you think. Vishen named them the IMPACT method (Imperfect beginning, Mind shift, Personal discovery, Audience participation, Concrete proof, Tension release), a piece of phraseology he found in about five minutes by asking an AI tool to make his six laws memorable.
- Start with the imperfect beginning. All six highest-rated speakers (including Daniel Priestley, Jeffrey Allen, Hal Elrod and Eric Edmeades) opened with humility rather than achievements. Lisa Nichols calls this 'the dip': a highlight video builds credibility, then she opens with being a single mother with $22 in the bank, wrapping her baby in towels. Your audience needs to feel you, not just hear you.

- If your mind shift came from someone else, always credit them. Vishen credits Bob Proctor, Jose Silva and Christie Marie Sheldon every time; all teachers are borrowing from someone, as Christopher Nolan credited Homer when adapting The Odyssey.
- Tell the story of your personal discovery, because the mind is 22 times more likely to remember a story than a fact. Vishen's story of losing the Silva Method business was his moment of realising he could step out from behind the scenes.
- Build in audience participation: Vishen used the Three Most Important Questions, Daniel Priestley had people write a pitch, Hal Elrod ran a guided meditation, and Vishen once had a whole room hold hands and greet each other. Then bring concrete proof, real numbers, studies or before-and-after evidence, such as the 25,972 case studies published on Mindvalley's stories site or one speaker's climb from $17 on day one to $81 a day by day four.
- End with tension release. The audience is either thinking 'that's a lot, I can't do it' or 'that was inspiring, I could do this too.' Release the unnecessary burden and offer a better next step so they leave with hope. The order after the imperfect beginning can be mixed, but the six elements should all be present.
- Proof that the formula travels: Vishen's episode on the Jay Shetty podcast is the 14th most popular in the show's history, tied with Kobe Bryant and ahead of Will Smith, because he speaks using this framework. And you do not need 20 speeches: many of the best speakers repeat about five talks, but every one lands with IMPACT. One life-transforming speech is enough to get your next big speaking event.

The IMPACT Method

1. I, Imperfect beginning: 'Here's where I struggled.' Open with the moment you were broken, not your achievements
2. M, Mind shift: 'Here's what I had backwards.' The belief you came to see was no longer true, crediting whoever taught you
3. P, Personal discovery: 'Here's what I discovered,' told as the story of how the shift happened, through study, a mentor or experience
4. A, Audience participation: 'Now let's try this.' Have them write something, repeat a line, pair up or join a short exercise
5. C, Concrete proof: 'Here's the evidence.' Real numbers, studies, before-and-after pictures, a website or a bank statement
6. T, Tension release: 'Here's what you can let go of and what to do next.' Release the unnecessary burden and offer a better next step

The Dip (credited to Lisa Nichols)

1. Let a video or introduction establish your credibility before you speak
2. Open from the bottom: 'Before all of that, this is who I was,' with the raw detail of your low point
3. Rise through the talk from that low point to where you are now

Score your talk

1. Take a talk you are planning or have given and treat it as adaptable, not fixed
2. Ask whether you can add each of the six elements: an imperfect beginning, a mind shift, the story of your personal discovery, a moment of audience participation, concrete proof, and a tension release that makes the next step feel easy
3. Give yourself a score out of 6 for how many you can add
4. Before tomorrow, take one topic and write down its IMPACT, commit it to memory and refine it

"The imperfect beginning. Your audience needs to feel you, not just hear you."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Here's the rule, though. If the mind shift is coming from someone, dead or alive, concretely, always, always, always credit them."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Human beings love storytelling. Your mind is 22 times more likely to remember a story than it is a fact."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You don't need 20 speeches to get your next big speaking event. You need one life-transforming speech."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Cheat. Do it the fast way. No one is paying you to be slow."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Score your talk out of 6: Think of a talk you plan to give. Go through the six IMPACT elements and ask 'can I add this?' for each. Put a 6 in the chat (or on your page) if you can add all six, a 5 for five, and so on.
- Homework: write your IMPACT: Before tomorrow, take a picture of the IMPACT slide, choose any topic you want to speak on, and write down your Imperfect beginning, Mind shift, Personal discovery, Audience participation, Concrete proof and Tension release. Commit it to memory and refine it.

Your next steps

1. Write your IMPACT outline for one talk tonight, as set in the homework, and keep it to one page.
2. Rewrite your opening so it starts with your low point rather than your credentials, and list the people you will credit for your mind shift.
3. Gather one piece of concrete proof (a number, a screenshot, a before-and-after) and design one audience participation moment for your talk.
4. Ask an AI tool to suggest a memorable name or mnemonic for your own framework, then test it on a friend.

The Products

KEYNOTE · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

The Product Step Ladder

Vishen opened Day 2 by showing you the one-page flow chart behind Mindvalley's $100 million business and the idea that sits underneath it: the product step ladder. You learned why selling a single product caps your growth, how a free experience leads into low-ticket, flagship, group and mastermind offers, and how to make every upsell feel like a helpful guide rather than a pushy salesperson. You also met Nora Cabani, a student who applied these ideas and grew her business 300% in three months and 1,100% in a year.

KEY IDEAS

- Your biggest mistake may not be your marketing, content or audience size but that you only sell one thing. Most experts run a restaurant that serves one excellent dish, only on Tuesdays, with no menu for the customer who comes back on Wednesday. Of roughly 8,000 attendees surveyed before the summit, 73% earn under $25,000 a year from their expert business and 23% earn between $25,000 and $500,000; growth is costing you hours, and the ladder is how you grow without adding hours.
- Ray Kroc's McDonald's model: would you like fries with that (upsell 1), add a Coke (upsell 2), supersize it (upsell 3). One purchase becomes three. McDonald's could keep the burger cheap because it made its money on the fries and the Coke. Your first product should simply break even and pay for advertising; the profit comes from products two and three.
- The Mindvalley funnel in real numbers: a masterclass sells the Silva Ultramind quest at $99 to $149; upsell 1 adds a $79 companion programme; if declined, a $29 downsell of a different product; then continuity via the meditation app at $99 a year, price locked for life. Day one only breaks even. Profit arrives on day 21 (an offer for Lifebook) and day 90 (an invitation to a summit), after three weeks of making sure the customer is having a great experience.
- Upsell as a friendly guide, not a used-car salesman. Vishen contrasted the pushy dealer who ripped the clipboard from his hands over a 1989 Honda Accord with the later salesperson who explained how to save $300 and threw in the spare tyre. He bought from both, but only ever recommended the second. Make the next offer a genuine service, and make refunds one click.
- Where you ask matters more than what you charge. Tony Robbins does not sell his $10,000 programme by email; it is sold on day 3 of a live event. Mindvalley sells its $5,000 programmes from the summit stage, not by email. Your first ask is always free.
- The maths of the ladder: only about 3% of your list will ever buy, and roughly 3% of those buyers produce 48% of your revenue. One buyer at $7,500 brings in more than 100 buyers at $49. This is why you must nurture every customer into a raving fan.
- Three levels of building an expert business: Level 1 is understanding smarter systems (takes you to about $1 million), Level 2 is optimisation with AI helping on pages and copy (to $10 million), Level 3 is automation where AI runs parts of the business (to $100 million). Vishen showed Mindvalley's Page

Builder AI cutting a two-week page build to 20 minutes and its CRO AI finding, at 95% confidence, a 115% lift from selling a single $99 programme rather than a $199 bundle. Eight Sleep's automated email AI now generates $100 million in revenue. If done right, your team size stays the same across all three levels.

- Nora Cabani, founder of Alba Health, sat where you are a year ago with under 1,000 followers and almost no sales. She picked a few things to implement immediately: a free assessment quiz (built in Typeform in three days, taken by over 20,000 people), masterclasses and email marketing. Three months later revenue was up 300% with ad costs cut 50%; a year later she had grown 1,100%, been named a top 10 innovator in Italy and had an open letter to the British government answered and published in The Guardian.

The Product Step Ladder

1. Rung 1, Free experience ($0): earn permission to contact them with a webinar, quiz, challenge, checklist or white paper.
2. Rung 2, Low-ticket offer ($27 to $97): turn a follower into a buyer with a single meditation, a chapter, a short book, a recorded workshop or a template pack. Resist charging $1,000 here even if the content is life-changing.
3. Rung 3, Flagship programme ($297 to $997; Mindvalley's range is $49 to $399): the course you are most passionate about, typically sold from a 60-minute masterclass with 45 minutes of teaching and 15 minutes of selling.
4. Rung 4, Group coaching programme ($1,000 to $2,997; Mindvalley's Mastery programmes are $5,000): offered about a month after the flagship purchase to work with students to get results, with strong community.
5. Rung 5, Mastermind for superfans ($5,000 to $25,000; Mindvalley's is $10,000 a year, application only): peers accelerating each other's businesses, or one-to-one coaching over a year.
6. The pricing rule: every rung up multiplies the price roughly five times, for example $20, $100, $500, $5,000, $25,000.
7. The loop: when someone finishes one ladder, loop them into a new one (Mindvalley's AI ladder feeds its entrepreneurship ladder, which feeds its expert-to-authority ladder).

Three Levels of Building an Expert Business

1. Level 1, Understanding: smarter systems, principles and models such as webinars, product pipelines, Cialdini's principles and copy. Gets you from $20K to $50K up to $1 million.
2. Level 2, Optimisation: bring in AI to optimise your pages, help with your copy and help write your webinar. Gets you to $10 million.
3. Level 3, Automation: the AI runs the business, like a dark factory where robots work without lights. Gets you to $100 million with the same team size.

The Ladder Question (ask it five times)

1. What do customers buy first?
2. What do they buy once that worked?
3. What do they buy next?
4. Repeat until you have five rungs.

“What if your biggest mistake is that you're only selling one thing? It's not your marketing, not your content, not your audience size, it's that you're only selling one thing.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Your first product is meant to just break even, pay for the cost of advertising.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“One buyer at $7,500 is generating more revenue for you than 100 buyers at 49 bucks. This is why you must have a step ladder.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Tony Robbins does not sell his $10,000 program by email. It is sold on day 3 of a live event.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“I want you to remember this before we end today. You don't need more customers, you need more rungs.”

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Map your ladder (Vishen's homework for later today). Write down: What do you sell now? What is the rung above it? What is the rung below it? What in your ladder might be in the wrong place? Which type of customer could your ladder be losing on day one (for example, someone not ready to spend $200 on your course who would happily pay $5 for one lesson)?
- If you have not sold anything yet, build the middle rung first: one flagship course. Do not try to create all five rungs at once; build them in phases, with your customers.

Your next steps

1. Complete the map-your-ladder questions and sketch all five rungs with a rough price for each, using the five-times rule.
2. Pick one missing rung you can add fastest, most likely a low-ticket product carved from what you already teach (a single meditation, chapter or template pack).
3. Rewrite your current upsell or next-offer message as a helpful guide: explain why it helps at that exact moment and make it easy to skip and easy to refund.
4. Decide where each offer will be asked for (email, masterclass, live event) rather than only what it will cost.

Building a Udemy Empire

Jimmy Naraine, who has taught more than 500,000 students on Udemy and collected over 125,000 five-star ratings, set out to make online course creation feel simple and doable rather than glamorous. You got an honest picture of what Udemy is and is not good for, the mindset shifts that stop most experts from ever publishing, and his practical method: short minimum-viable courses, the Pajama Draft, listening to three- and four-star reviews, and stacking angles so your catalogue compounds. He closed by asking you to commit to one action in the next 72 hours.

KEY IDEAS

- Passive income from your expertise is real but not effortless. Jimmy still earns from courses he made 13 years ago, and while climbing a near-7,000-metre mountain in Argentina for two and a half weeks offline he sold around 1,500 courses. The catch: true passive income comes to people who do not over-optimize for it. People who only ask 'what can I publish to make money fastest' never last, because they are takers. Build an ecosystem of multiple courses, not one product, and combine it with the other things this summit teaches.
- Most experts are held back by their nervous system, not by a lack of information. Jimmy shared his most embarrassing story: in 2017, already teaching tens of thousands, he dodged a call with Jay Shetty with excuses about bad Wi-Fi and travel because imposter syndrome told him he was not ready for a bigger arena. He calls this sophisticated hiding: living an impressive life full of seminars and travel while avoiding the uncomfortable things that matter, which are shipping, pitching and volunteering for the stage.
- You do not need to be famous or young. Jimmy's father, a doctor who changed careers several times, said 'I'm in my 50s, what could I even teach?' He filmed his first course on an iPhone 4 with a basic lamp and a $20 microphone, it became a bestseller, and he now teaches over 200,000 people while keeping his full-time job. Course income is not binary between millionaire and bust; an extra $2,000 to $5,000 a month semi-passively is a perfectly good goal.
- What Udemy actually is: a marketplace with 80 million students who already have their cards on file, free to register as an instructor, publishable within a day, and non-exclusive so you can sell elsewhere too. Coursera acquired Udemy this year and a combined marketplace could reach 290 million students. The downsides are real: you do not get students' email addresses directly, and it is a discount platform where buyers typically pay $15 to $25 (around $10 on Black Friday), so it is a volume game. Its biggest advantage is verified credibility: 125,000 public ratings on a big platform tells a stranger's nervous system 'this person is legit'. Relatability sells there; ordinary people buy from instructors they resonate with.
- Treat Udemy as upgraded social media and build a Minimum Viable Product, not a monster. People pay for transformation, not for what you know: a thirsty person pays anything for water, and someone who wants to cross a river does not care about your two-year bridge, they will take the speedboat. Offered a 4-hour and a 24-hour course with equal ratings, almost everyone in the chat picked 4 hours. An MVP can be 40 to 60 minutes. His 14-Minute Confidence Guide started as a spontaneous 40-minute free course, grew with each round of reviews, and now has over 100,000 students and 7 to 8 hours of content. Five 45- to 60-minute courses in 12 months is a realistic target.

- Listen to your three- and four-star reviews, not the five-star ones, because those people liked it but something was missing. When five or ten say the same thing, act; when students asked for PDF summaries he made them and ratings rose. Fall in love with testing: the year he filmed over a thousand videos nothing happened at first, then a little success, then compounding. You cannot predict which course will blow up, so publish several small ones, look at the data and put extra effort into the winner.
- Ninety percent done but not published equals zero, or worse than zero, because you spent the time and gained nothing. Toxic perfectionism is his own weakness too, so he sets phone reminders to ship. Lower the pressure by remembering everything is a draft: you could publish a course tonight and unpublish it ten minutes later and nobody would know. Multiple angles also compound search: he has confidence courses for leaders, introverts, presenters and 'anxious and awkward' people, sharing 60 to 70 percent of the same core, so several show up on pages one and two. Go ultra-specific to trigger the buyer's reticular activating system; only established brands can afford generic titles.
- Buyers judge the gate, not the hotel: they never see video 15 or 27, only your title, subtitle, biography, promo material and free preview videos, so both the entrance and the course itself must be excellent. Publishing builds an ecosystem: courses give you public proof to pitch conference organisers (send them free access so they see how you present in ten seconds), stages bring people who buy courses and ask for coaching and corporate training, and those clients buy more courses. His first one-to-one session was $150 and felt like too much; today engagements are 100 times that because visible credibility, trust and relatability change what people will pay. AI is scaffolding, not the building; nobody moves into scaffolding, they move into your personality, stories and experience. People want to learn from a human five years ahead of them, not a billionaire teaching budgeting. You will never feel 100 percent ready, so jump and trust the wings will develop.

If I started today: Jimmy's course-building sequence

1. Start with the avatar: if you struggle to find one, think of yourself 2, 3, 5 or 10 years ago and what you overcame
2. Define one clear transformation, taking them from where they are to where they want to be as fast as possible (the speedboat, not the bridge)
3. Reverse engineer: imagine you die tomorrow and have 60 to 90 minutes to teach that person only what they need, not everything you know
4. Write a basic curriculum and do not keep polishing it
5. Film the Pajama Draft from start to finish
6. Publish it as a Minimum Viable Product of 40 to 60 minutes
7. Read the three- and four-star reviews and add or revamp content when five or ten people say the same thing
8. Publish more courses with different angles on the same core so search compounds, then put extra effort into whichever one takes off

The Pajama Draft

1. Once you have a basic curriculum, put on pyjamas or something ridiculous so your nervous system knows this cannot be published
2. Set up your phone and a small microphone
3. Film the whole course from beginning to end; if you forget something, glance at your notes and keep going; if you make a mistake, breathe and keep going
4. Use it to see what works and what does not, shorten stories that run long, and prove to yourself you can speak your entire course out loud
5. Do it within the next 72 hours

Building an ecosystem

1. Publish multiple courses so you have students, reviews and data
2. Pitch conference organisers as a published teacher and send them free access to a course as living proof you can present
3. Speak on stages, where people discover you and buy your courses
4. Say yes when attendees ask for coaching, consulting or corporate training
5. Those clients then take your courses, so every part feeds the others and your rates rise with your visible credibility

“True passive income will come to those who don't overly optimize for passive income.”

Jimmy Naraine

“People will not pay you for what you know. People will pay you for the transformation, whatever it is that they want.”

Jimmy Naraine

“90% done and not published is, like, zero. It's even worse than zero, to be honest, because you've spent all that time, and you're gaining no benefit.”

Jimmy Naraine

“No one will move into a scaffolding. People move into a real building.”

Jimmy Naraine

“If you wait until you feel 100% ready, you will never do anything massive.”

Jimmy Naraine

TRY THIS

- Write down what has been holding you back from publishing a course: fear, self-doubt, overwhelm or not knowing where to start.
- Thought experiment: two courses on the same topic with equally great ratings, one 4 hours and one 24 hours. Notice which you would pick, and design your own course accordingly.

- Find your avatar by thinking about yourself 2, 3, 5 or 10 years ago: what did you struggle with that you have since overcome? Teach the previous version of you.
- Imagine you will die tomorrow and have only 60 to 90 minutes to teach that person everything they need to reach their goal. Build your curriculum from that.
- Film a Pajama Draft of your whole course in the next 72 hours, and commit to it publicly in the chat or by messaging Jimmy on social media.
- Screenshot the six summary slides shown at the end of the session.
- Commit to one concrete action from this talk, or any talk at the summit, within 72 hours, and tell Jimmy or someone in the community so they can hold you accountable.

Your next steps

1. Choose one specific avatar (your past self) and one transformation, and write a 60- to 90-minute curriculum for it, nothing more.
2. Film your Pajama Draft start to finish within 72 hours, phone and $20 microphone only.
3. Register a free Udemy instructor account and publish a 40- to 60-minute MVP, with a specific title, subtitle, bio and a couple of free preview videos, remembering it is only a draft you can change or unpublish.
4. Anything sitting 90 percent finished on your hard drive: ship it this week, then read the three- and four-star feedback to decide what to improve.

The Free Product Content Machine

In a fast 20-minute session, Vishen showed you how to stop treating content as a weekly creative struggle and start running it as a system. You saw how one signature piece a week becomes a YouTube script, an email, a reel and a LinkedIn post, how he uses Claude projects trained on his own style to do the conversion, and where this leads when the whole engine is automated.

KEY IDEAS

- Content is not a creative act, it is a system. The best experts spend one day a month, about 8 hours, producing enough content for the next 30 days. Everything else is repurposing.
- Start with one signature piece a week drawn from whatever you are exploring: a book you read, a trip, a conversation. Vishen's example was a long-form email about visiting a village of San Bushmen in Africa, written from his own notes and photographs with AI assistance, then fed into AIs to produce the YouTube video, Instagram posts and LinkedIn version.
- Block specific hours and allow yourself to be imperfect. Vishen's newsletter goes out on Wednesdays, so he blocks about two hours on Tuesday. The weekly maths: one pillar piece, five social posts, one email and one short-form video is 8 pieces a week and 32 a month, your 30-day content plan done in one afternoon. It does not matter if it takes you four or five hours instead of two; it is not a competition.

- Every piece of content should point somewhere. The email teases and drives to the long-form piece; the reel and LinkedIn post drive to it too; the long form drives to a masterclass landing page that sells your flagship course. Vishen's 32-minute Silva Ultramind masterclass has been watched by 825,000 people and converts thousands into the flagship programme.
- Live demo: he pasted his Day 1 impact talk into Claude and asked for a compelling YouTube video; then pasted that script into a Claude project trained on email writing and said only 'Can you turn this into an email? Put the email in HTML and give me two variations so I can split test.' The same talk also became an Instagram reel script. No fancy prompt was needed.
- When the output does not sound like you, fine-tune by talking to it. Vishen dictates feedback using a voice tool rather than typing, adds specific details (where and when a story happened, a line that landed), and supplies a Speaking Style Guide he created by loading his past talks into AI and asking it to analyse them and produce a style guide he can use with any AI.
- Build one small trained AI for each part of your business you care about. If you only care about email and Instagram, your machine has two boxes. Vishen's Instagram Reels Studio project holds instructions, files on his top-performing reels, briefs and reusable prompts, built largely by asking Claude to interview him.
- Three levels again: understanding, optimisation, automation. At the most advanced level Vishen runs a personal AI companion on WhatsApp that holds his notes and memories, sits in his meetings, develops its own skills and drafted the slides for the Product Step Ladder session you had just watched. You can build your own version, but the entry point is one Claude project for one channel.

The Free Product Content Machine

1. Block specific hours each week for content (Vishen: about two hours on Tuesday for a Wednesday newsletter) and allow yourself to be imperfect.
2. Create one signature (pillar) piece from something you are exploring that week.
3. Generate the long-form outputs from it: a YouTube or podcast script, a livestream, a LinkedIn post, a newsletter.
4. Create the social derivatives: a carousel, a reel, a TikTok, five social posts.
5. Write one email that teases what they will learn and drives to the long-form piece.
6. Point all of it at your masterclass landing page, which sells your flagship course.
7. Repeat for each platform you use until you have a scalable content engine (weekly total: 8 pieces, 32 a month).

Building a Claude Project for a Content Channel (as demonstrated)

1. Tell Claude plainly what you need it to become good at, in your own words, even grumpy ones. No prompt engineering required.
2. Give it a real piece of source material, such as a speech, and let it produce the first draft for that channel.
3. Give feedback: make it sound like me, add this detail, change that line. Provide your Speaking Style Guide if you have one.
4. Ask it to remember your preferences and create a project for that channel, giving you the project files.
5. Copy the project instructions file into a new project's instructions and drop the remaining guideline files into the project.
6. Reuse the project every week; you only set it up once.

Creating a Speaking Style Guide

1. Gather transcripts of your prior talks or writing.
2. Load them into Claude or ChatGPT.
3. Ask it to analyse them and produce a speaking style guide you can use with any AI.
4. Attach the guide whenever an output does not sound like you.

"The best experts only spend one day a month, and in one day a month, they produce enough content for the next 30 days."

Vishen Lakhiani

"The message I want you to take home is this. Content is not a creative act. It is a system."

Vishen Lakhiani

"And that's what I want you to understand, like, AI has moved beyond prompt engineering."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Once you get it to this level, this is not about working harder. It's about installing a content operating system. You set it up once, and it runs."

Vishen Lakhiani

"So remember, there are 3 levels of understanding how to become an expert. Understanding. Optimization. Automation. Automation is when work just disappears."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Map your own business the way Vishen mapped his: list the content channels you actually care about (for example, just email and Instagram) and draw one box for each.
- Create a Speaking Style Guide: load your past talks, posts or emails into an AI and ask it to analyse them and produce a style guide you can reuse.

- Build your first Claude project for one channel by following the demonstrated steps: describe what you need, feed it a speech or transcript, give feedback, then ask it to turn itself into a reusable project.

Your next steps

1. Block two hours in your calendar this week for content, on a fixed day, and protect it.
2. Write one signature piece from something you are genuinely exploring right now.
3. Use an AI to turn that piece into one email, one short video script and one social post, then fine-tune until it sounds like you.
4. Make sure each derivative links to the long-form piece, and that the long-form piece links to the page where you sell your flagship course.

From Free to Leads: The Power of Email

Vishen made the case that email, not social media, is the asset your business is built on, and showed you exactly how he learned that in 2003 when a nine-lesson email sequence lifted his first website's sales 94% overnight. You left with the three rules of a great autoresponder, a modern seven-step email sequence to copy, four subject-line formulas and a simple way to use AI to write your sequence from your own course material.

KEY IDEAS

- Social media builds reach, email builds relationships, and relationships build revenue. Mindvalley still makes more than ten times the revenue from email that it makes from social media. Email is not sexy, but email is money.
- The one number every expert should obsess over is the size of your email list, because it is the one asset the algorithm cannot take away. When Facebook changed its algorithm in 2010, pages with a million followers dropped from reaching 100,000 people to 5,000 and businesses collapsed; Mindvalley's did not, because it had email. Your list is your business's immune system: in a WhatsApp group of over 100 Mindvalley authors, someone loses an Instagram or TikTok account every few months, but nobody loses their email list. Nora at Alba Health builds hers two ways, a free assessment quiz and a newsletter sign-up; start with the newsletter because it is easier.
- Vishen's 2003 origin story: he built a Silva Method website, lost money for three months, then read a 65-page book by a Malaysian marketer with one idea: create an email autoresponder that gives away free information drip style. He spent 30 days writing nine lessons (Living Your Alpha Life). Overnight, sales rose 94%, and doubled conversions meant ads became profitable, affiliates wanted to mail for him and everything compounded. Over a million people eventually signed up.
- Rule 1, put your best foot forward first: do not give away your weakest content. He gave away the single thing that blows every Silva student away, the 22-minute Silva Centering Exercise, as a free

MP3 in Lesson 2 and did not care if it was pirated.

- Rule 2, educate the user: build the case for why your product matters. In 2003 meditation was fringe, so he explained beta, alpha, theta and delta brainwaves, told the story of Thomas Edison's naps, and backed creative visualisation with quotes from the Washington Times and CBS News. Everywhere, add science and data.
- Rule 3, drip feed: do not give everything at once. Picture Cleopatra being fed grapes one at a time. Lessons went out with reminder emails in between (did you get Lesson 1? here is 20% off the course), roughly every 48 hours, so that by Lesson 9 people were desperate to buy.
- You do not need to be the author or own the product; you need to understand the system. Vishen was only an affiliate for a publisher's Silva course but out-sold their own website, built a 200,000-person list, and used it to go directly to Jose Silva's family and create his own programme.
- After the autoresponder, do not stop. Non-buyers move into a daily newsletter (Mindvalley Daily goes out five times a week) after 14 days, where they may discover a different teacher. Buyers move into a customer nurturing sequence. Segment everyone by tagging: lead magnet, quiz taken, masterclass watched, emails opened, links clicked, purchases made.

The Three Rules of the Autoresponder Sequence

1. Put your best foot forward first: give away your best content free, not your weakest.
2. Educate the user: explain why your product matters, with science, data and stories.
3. Drip feed: release one lesson at a time, roughly every 48 hours, with reminder emails in between.

The Email Sequence (updated for today)

1. Deliver the lead magnet.
2. Your origin story.
3. Your core belief.
4. A quick win.
5. Social proof.
6. Introduce your offer.
7. Direct invite.

The Email Flow After Sign-Up

1. Lead magnet list: they sign up to solve one thing (PDF, white paper, webinar) and you deliver value fast.
2. Autoresponder sequence: drip the lessons over about 14 days.
3. Buyers go into a customer nurturing sequence; non-buyers go into your daily or regular newsletter for the ongoing relationship.

Four Sticky Subject Line Ideas

1. Ask a question: Are you making this mistake?
2. Make a bold claim: I was wrong about meditation.
3. Use a number: Three things I wish I'd known at 30 (odd numbers tested better).
4. Create curiosity: What happened when I stopped checking email?

"But the fact is, social media builds reach, email builds relationships, and relationships build revenue."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Every expert should be obsessed with one number, the size of your email list, because that list is the one asset the algorithm cannot take away from you."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Put your best foot forward first. What it means is, don't give away your weakest content. Give away your best content free."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You drop the grapes in one at a time. You don't just take a bunch of grapes and stick it in your customer's mouth, right? You drip feed, and there's a tease to it."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You don't need to be the author. You don't need to have your own product. You just need to understand the system."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Screenshot the seven-step email sequence (deliver the lead magnet, origin story, core belief, quick win, social proof, introduce your offer, direct invite). Paste it into Claude along with your course transcript and ask it to create an email autoresponder sequence in that format, dripping the content, leading with your best lesson, and educating readers who do not yet understand your product with science and data.
- Visit AlbaHealth.com and sign up for the newsletter and the free assessment to experience a student's working example of the two email capture methods.
- Screenshot the four subject-line formulas and rewrite your next three subject lines using them.

Your next steps

1. Identify your single best lesson or exercise and make it the free lead magnet, delivered in the first or second email.
2. Draft or generate your seven-email autoresponder this week and set it to send roughly every 48 hours.
3. Add a newsletter sign-up to your website first (quizzes can come later) and choose the regular cadence you will actually keep.
4. Set up basic tags in your email tool so buyers and non-buyers receive different sequences.

Crafting the Customer Experience

Vishen closed his run of sessions with what happens after someone says yes. You learned why the sale is the starting line, how a single customer-stories page lifted his early website's revenue 40% across every traffic source, the three phases of the customer journey (onboarding, journey, graduation) and the exact first-week emails and touchpoints that turn buyers into raving fans who buy again and bring others with them.

KEY IDEAS

- It is far more expensive to create a customer than to keep one, so when you get a customer, do everything you can to keep them. The sale is the starting line, not the finish, yet most businesses put all their attention on acquisition and drop the customer the moment they pay.
- Customer obsession shows up in public trust. Mindvalley's Trustpilot score is 4.3; Vishen compared it live with MasterClass at 1.6 and Calm at 1.4 and said he has not found a competitor with a higher score. This matters more every year because people increasingly ask AI for recommendations, and AI reads customer reviews rather than marketing.
- In 2016 Vishen emailed everyone who had ever bought a ticket to a Mindvalley event and invited them to hang out in Estonia. Eighteen people came, a three-day meet-up stretched to seven, and one of those customers later became a Mindvalley author. You do not need to go to pubs with your customers, but being this focused on them has powerful side effects.
- The 40% move: on his 2003 Silva website he added a single 'User Experience' tab, one long page of customer stories. Almost nobody read it, but seeing that it existed made the offer feel real, and revenue rose 40% from email traffic and 40% from Google ads alike. Every one of you needs a testimonial or user-stories page.
- Mindvalley scaled that idea into stories.mindvalley.com, where 25,974 customers have submitted stories through a simple form (language, programme, name, job title, email, city, story, photo). Stories can be filtered by topic and shown by the visitor's country. One team member built the whole system in about a week using Claude; you can do it with a form plus a Google Sheet or Airtable.
- Every customer passes through three phases, onboarding, journey and graduation, but most experts only build for one. Onboarding answers 'I bought it, how do I log in, what if I don't like it, how do I get a refund?' The journey needs support, a place to share wins and a live touchpoint. Graduation is completion and what comes after.
- Make refunds easy. Mindvalley offers one-click refunds, and if someone asks past the refund date, give it anyway; it is not worth angering a customer. On the journey, one live touchpoint matters most: Vishen borrowed the idea of teaching-assistant office hours from his University of Michigan days, so Mastery students get a class early in the week and community hours on Friday where they help each other.
- Graduation is where stories are born. On a graduation call everyone receives a certificate, people share, sharing inspires more sharing, and only then does the team ask permission to use those stories or point people to the stories page. If someone will not give a testimonial, ask instead what could have been done better. Every graduate becomes a story that brings in the next graduates, and graduates kept in the community keep buying: Vishen met a customer at an Estonian airport who had bought six $5,000 Mastery programmes, one after another, because each one delighted her.

The Three Phases of the Customer Journey

1. Phase 1, Onboarding: how do I log in, what happens if I don't like it, how do I get a refund. Build an onboarding sequence, or at least one email that explains everything.
2. Phase 2, Journey: supportive help while they go through the programme (Mindvalley gives 21 days), a number or place to reach if they get stuck, an easy one-click refund.
3. Phase 3, Graduation: completion and what comes after; nurture the customer, gather stories, keep them in the community and invite them to events.

Phase 1 Onboarding: The First 7 Days

1. Day 1: a welcome email within 5 minutes of purchase.
2. Day 2: tell the customer what to do first.
3. Day 3: a first win. Congratulate them for signing up and for watching Lesson 1.

Phase 2 Journey: Nobody Finishes a Programme Alone

1. Progress markers.
2. A place to share wins (a community).
3. Automated check-ins.
4. One live touchpoint: a Q&A call, office hours or a group session.

Phase 3 Graduation

1. Hold a graduation call and give everyone a completion certificate.
2. Invite people to share; each share inspires the next.
3. Ask for a testimonial. If they will not give one, ask what you could have done better.
4. Ask permission to use their story on your website, and point them to your stories form.
5. Keep them in the community, gather feedback and invite them to your events.

The Customer Story Format

1. Before this program, I...
2. Thanks to this program, I...
3. And now my life is...

"It is far more expensive to create a customer than to keep a customer. So when you get a customer, you want to do everything you can to keep the customer."

Vishen Lakhiani

"I want you to understand that the sale is the starting line. This is where you begin. The sale is not the end. It is absolutely the starting line."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You have to be customer-focused, and most of us are not. The world gets us obsessed with marketing. But we need to be obsessed with retaining and making sure our customers experience magic."

Vishen Lakhiani

"All of you need a user experience or testimonial page on your website."

Vishen Lakhiani

"If a customer wants a refund, just give it to them. Even if it's past the refund date, just give it to them."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Go to stories.mindvalley.com, click 'Tell us your story' and submit your own story about the summit. Doing this shows you the exact form and process for collecting customer stories.
- Photograph the Phase 1 onboarding slide (welcome within 5 minutes, what to do first, a first win) and either hand it to whoever runs your email, or paste it into Claude, describe your business and have it write the three emails.
- Create a customer story form using the three-line format (Before this program, I... Thanks to this program, I... And now my life is...) with fields for name, job title, city, programme and a photo, and store the responses in a Google Sheet or Airtable.

Your next steps

1. Add a testimonial or user-stories page to your website this week, even if it is one long plain page.
2. Write and schedule your three onboarding emails for the first week after purchase.
3. Schedule one live touchpoint for current customers, such as a monthly Q&A or office hours.
4. Simplify your refund process and decide in advance that you will honour late requests.

PROGRAMME OVERVIEW · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

The Mindvalley Training System

Vishen explains the thinking behind how Mindvalley turns experts into recognised authorities, and introduces the four-month Expert to Authority Mastery built on that method. You hear why he believes authority is a learnable method rather than a gift, what the 3,000-person summit survey revealed about where expert businesses break down, and how the five-pillar curriculum, weekly implementation labs and AI skill packs are designed to close that gap.

KEY IDEAS

- The authority gap is the distance between what you know and how the market perceives you. Vishen's position is that the gap can be engineered closed: the people getting the client, the stage and the press are rarely more qualified, they have simply learned the systems.
- The market cannot hire an expert it cannot find. Being findable (social media, SEO, organic traffic, influencer marketing, advertising) is a separate problem from being good, and both have to be solved.
- Authority is a method, not a gift. People are born with articulation, a genius brain or a passion, but the method for scaling an audience has to be learned, and the same machine has worked across very different niches (Lifebook, Regan Hillyer, Marisa Peer, Jim Kwik).
- When 3,000 summit registrants were asked where their business was breaking down, the two most common answers were 'nobody knows I exist' and 'I can't put what I do into words'. Vishen treats these as the day-one problems to solve, then builds systems so you never get stuck expressing yourself again.
- Learning only sticks when it is applied the same week. The programme pairs every teaching session with an implementation lab so that a new component of the business is birthed each week rather than sitting as notes on paper.
- AI tools should be built to learn and self-evolve. Vishen's 'skill packs' are meant to get better with every email and page you produce, and the same principle applies to your team: his company went from 400 people to around 200 with heavy AI use and higher output.
- Partnership and collaboration are relationship work, not transactions. Vishen describes the teachers he works with as friends rather than clients, and credits that way of structuring partnerships with why they show up for each other.
- Legacy means a business that outlives you and survives your absence, so that a two-week camping trip you promised your child does not stop revenue. This is the final pillar because everything else is built towards it.
- A flagship course anchors everything else. Vishen's own flagship is the Silva programme and it drives the rest of his product ladder; the Dawn Huang story (from $300 an hour to $800 an hour with a 2,000-person waiting list in one year) illustrates what happens when a talented practitioner applies the method rather than staying at the same rate for a decade.

The four authority-gap questions

1. Have you ever watched someone less qualified than you get the client, the stage or the press, and asked why it wasn't you?
2. Do you privately know your work is better than your results suggest?
3. If more people simply knew you existed, would your income change?
4. Do you already know roughly what has been stopping you?

Five pillars of the Expert to Authority curriculum

1. Messaging and positioning: niche, vision, standing out, signature method, high-value signature offers, persuasion, copywriting and influence
2. Platform and content: designing your course, building a publishing machine, AI skill packs, scaling social media, the Oversubscribed funnel process
3. Funnel and conversion: paid advertising, funnel design, webinar and VSL playbooks, email marketing
4. Scale and products: membership, high-ticket one-to-one coaching, owning the stage, building a digital brain, building teams of humans with AI companions, partnerships and collaboration
5. Legacy and systems: building a business that outlives you

Weekly learn-and-build rhythm

1. Tuesday: live content session that goes deep on one principle (for example email), with structure, templates and AI skills
2. Friday: live implementation lab with other students and a trained AI facilitator, applying the principle to your own business
3. Every session is live and recorded; budget about three hours a week of attendance

Ten outcomes the programme is designed around

1. Own a category instead of competing in one
2. A packaged, named signature method
3. Expertise turned into an offer people pay a premium for
4. A course that sells itself through results
5. Never running out of things to say
6. A funnel that runs while you sleep
7. An email list that becomes your most valuable asset
8. Revenue that renews itself
9. High-ticket offers
10. A business that does not need you in the room

THE CONVERSATION

Jason Goldberg

What does it actually take to move these concepts from notes on paper into your business, so you see the same results Vishen, Jimmy and John have been showing?

Vishen Lakhiani

Over 22 years I've built brands for about 100 teachers. The next evolution is to teach that method to the next group of aspiring teachers and leaders, and how deep you go depends on where you are: for some the summit is enough, and for those who want to scale to their first 10 million there is a four-month curriculum.

"No one is born with the gift of authority. They're born with the gift of articulation, with the gift of a genius brain, with the gift of a passion."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You also have to understand that the market cannot hire an expert it cannot find."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Everything can be engineered. The people who are blowing up, who are less qualified than you, they've figured out the systems."

"The authors that work at Mindvalley are not just clients to me. They are friends."

Vishen Lakhiani

"So, it's not just learning in theory, it's applied every single week."

What was announced

Vishen announced Expert to Authority Mastery, a four-month live programme running October 2026 to January 2027: 18 weeks, 36 live sessions, with a live teaching call and an implementation lab each week, all recorded. Vishen is the main teacher, with guest teachers Daniel Priestley, Jimmy Naraine, John Lee and Ajit Nawalkha, and the cohort is planned at around 500 people including a number of Mindvalley teachers. The curriculum follows five pillars (messaging and positioning, platform and content, funnel and conversion, scale and products, legacy and systems) and includes the community platform, summit and Mastery recordings, a certificate of completion, and an opening 'Authority Skill Pack' session with Vishen on Friday 25 September where the AI skills shown at the summit are installed. Vishen stated the price on stage as $4,999 (or four payments of $1,499), with a $500 discount for Mindvalley members and a full refund available at any time in the first two weeks. Those enrolling by Monday 21 September were also offered a Mindvalley Accelerator workshop with Jimmy Naraine (four to six hours) to build their flagship course.

Your next steps

1. Write your honest answers to the four authority-gap questions and name the one thing you already suspect has been holding you back.
2. Decide which of the two survey breakdowns is yours (nobody knows I exist, or I can't put what I do into words) and draft a one-sentence statement of what you do.
3. Identify your flagship course or offer: the one product that everything else in your ladder should drive towards.
4. Review the programme overview and, if you are considering enrolling, make sure you have an AI subscription and can attend Tuesdays and Fridays at the stated times.

KEYNOTE · AJIT NAWALKHA · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

How to Create High End Coaching Solutions

Ajit Nawalkha, co-founder of Mindvalley Coach and author of The Book of Coaching and Live Big, closed Day 2 with a 25-minute answer to why some experts can only charge a few hundred dollars while others charge six figures for what looks like the same expertise. You learned his CARES method, the difference between solving for pain and solving for gain, and exactly which elements a $3,000, $30,000 and $100,000-plus offer each need. He asked you to sit with the model for 30 to 60 minutes and find the one gap to fix next, and noted that the Expert to Authority Mastery programme is designed to help fill those gaps.

KEY IDEAS

- A high-ticket offer is anything over $3,000, and the same approach Ajit teaches here has generated over $57 million in certifications since 2022 (the business grew so strongly that Mindvalley asked to partner, which is how it became Mindvalley Coach). In parallel this year his digital products have reached over 2,000 students and $453,000, and a Dubai-only consulting and AI offer made $160,000 in its first 60 days. He built all of this while keeping a promise, made when his first child arrived, to work no more than five or six hours a day.
- Nobody buys your package; everybody buys your result. Early in his coaching career Ajit packed offers with calls and hours, and even clients who signed up would say a few weeks later 'but I signed up for the thing all this was supposed to give me'. The only question for what goes into a product is whether it moves the client toward the result.
- Solving for pain versus solving for gain decides your price. Pain (lose five or ten pounds) is how you make some money, but it is a highly competitive market where someone always undercuts you, a race to the bottom. Gain serves people who are already successful and want the next level: deeper in an already good relationship, another million on an existing business. It is harder to sell but has far less competition and much higher prices. Anything over $3,000 usually has to be solving for gain: you take someone who is already good and make them great.

- The CARES method is the five letters to remember when designing a higher-tier programme: Convenient (how easy is it to access you and the programme), Affinity (how close and accessible you are to this group), Return on investment (can you justify the dollars going in), Exclusive (10 people or 5,000; the less exclusive, the less expensive) and Status, the secret one: how does the client feel saying 'my coach is ____'. Status defines the highest fee you can charge.
- Each price tier leans on different CARES elements. A $3,000 training mostly sells convenience: online, recordings, some AI support, enrolment once or twice a year, tied to a direct result. At $30,000 the buyer wants return on investment; they typically earn $300,000 to $400,000 or have disposable income from a job, exit or investments, and they need the fear of that spend justified. From $30,000 to $40,000 up to $100,000 you must add exclusivity and affinity: are you taking a few clients or thousands, and do I get real access to you. Ajit runs $3,000 trainings, $30,000 consulting programmes, $40,000 AI-plus-consulting programmes and a $150,000-a-year private tier for a handful of clients.
- Above $100,000 it is almost entirely about status. At $3,000 and even $30,000 it is all about results, but at $100,000 to $150,000 the question is whether you are the authority in that field. People who charge in this range invest very heavily in social media, funnels and advertising because they want the client to walk in already convinced; they have experienced you across social, webinars and funnels and built a whole world around you.
- Authority removes the convincing. Enrolment is the hardest part of most coaching and consulting businesses because it is a tedious convincing process. When you are an authority the person arrives asking only for the details: that you are not over-enrolling, that they can trust you, and that they will get results. Blending all five CARES elements makes enrolment easier and also makes it easier to create results with the clients you take on.
- Use the theory of constraints to choose your next move: find the one big thing that acts like a domino for your whole business. Earlier this year Ajit's newer business, Greater Insight, had great products and loyal clients but was not growing fast enough; the constraint was leads. He found the two reasons, fixed them, and the business has grown 100 percent every month for the last three months. Information without action changes nothing, so the one gap you identify is what to work on next.

The CARES method

1. C is for Convenient: how easy is it to access the programme and to work with you
2. A is for Affinity: how close you are to this group and how much access they have to you
3. R is for Return on investment: can you justify that the money going in comes back
4. E is for Exclusive: is it limited to 10, 50, 500 people; the less exclusive, the less expensive
5. S is for Status: how the client feels associating with you when they say 'my coach is ____'; this sets the highest fee you can charge

Solving for pain versus solving for gain

1. Solving for pain (lose five pounds, fix a problem) makes some money but puts you in a crowded market where price is a race to the bottom
2. Solving for gain (taking someone already successful to the next level) is harder to sell but has less competition and much higher prices
3. Any offer over $3,000 usually has to solve for gain: you take somebody who is already good and make them great

What each price tier needs (as Ajit laid it out)

1. $3,000: convenience plus a direct result; online, recordings, some AI, enrolment once or twice a year
2. $30,000: return on investment; the buyer usually earns $300,000 to $400,000 or has disposable income and needs the spend justified
3. $30,000 to $40,000 up to $100,000: convenience and ROI plus exclusivity (few clients) and affinity (real access to you)
4. $100,000 to $150,000 and above: status; the client sees you as the authority and walks in already convinced

Theory of constraints, as Ajit applies it

1. Ask: what is the one big thing that, if fixed, acts like a domino for the whole business
2. Find out why that thing is not yet solved (for his Greater Insight business it was leads, with two specific causes)
3. Fix those causes and measure the change

“The first thing to know is nobody buys your package. Nobody. Everybody buys your result.”

Ajit Nawalkha

“When you are solving for pain, you are in a highly competitive market. And when you're in a highly competitive market, somebody is always trying to undercut the price, and hence, it's a race to the bottom.”

Ajit Nawalkha

“When you are creating higher-tier products, when you are trying to price something that is over $3,000, it usually has to be solving for gain. You are getting somebody who's already good, you're making them great.”

Ajit Nawalkha

“When you're charging $3,000, when you're charging even $30,000, it's all about results. But when you're charging $100,000, $150,000, it's all about, are you an authority in that field?”

Ajit Nawalkha

“But when you're an authority, guess what happens? You don't have to convince. The person walks in saying, I just want to know what are the details in the program.”

Ajit Nawalkha

TRY THIS

- Type the CARES letters you already have in your business today (Convenient, Affinity, Return on investment, Exclusive, Status) and notice which are missing.
- Answer honestly: why should a client sign with you? Why should they trust you? Why should they want to work with you?
- Take a 30- to 60-minute block, sit with all the models you wrote down over the two days, including CARES, and check whether your current offer fits. Where it does not, write down what needs to change, what you need to learn, what you need to engage with and what community you need to be part of. Writing it down makes your next move obvious.

Your next steps

1. Score your main offer against each CARES letter and pick the single missing element to add first.
2. Decide whether your offer is solving for pain or for gain; if you want to price above $3,000, rewrite the promised result for someone who is already good and wants to be great.
3. Choose the tier you are aiming for ($3,000, $30,000, or $100,000-plus) and list the specific elements that tier requires: convenience, ROI proof, exclusivity and access, or visible status.
4. Apply the theory of constraints: name the one domino holding your business back this quarter, find the reasons behind it and fix those first.

VIP Q&A · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

VIP Q&A with Vishen

In this smaller VIP session Jason Goldberg relays upvoted questions while Vishen, joining from London, answers on beginners and pre-revenue businesses, organic high-ticket sales, the internal shift behind authority, overwhelm, signature methods, pricing signals, website structure and whether authority can be guaranteed. You also see him use his own AI companion live to prioritise questions, digest a lesson he never watched, and run a funnel analysis on an attendee's website.

KEY IDEAS

- You can be pre-revenue, but not pre-direction. The programme and the method work for a founder who is not yet earning as an authority or for an employee who is brilliant at something, as long as you know roughly what you want to be known for; if you are still choosing between longevity and meditation, find your niche first.

- High-ticket coaching can be sold entirely organically if the customer spends real time with you. Instagram grabs attention but shows only snippets; the bond is built in long-form YouTube (30 minutes to two hours, possibly across several videos), and from there you go straight to the high-end offer, as Daniel Priestley and Jay Shetty do.
- The internal shift behind authority is your rate of learning: how fast you absorb, connect disparate ideas ('idea collision') and act. Vishen's model of the future is three brains working together: your human mind, an AI brain that maps your knowledge, and an AI companion that studies, listens and drafts for you.
- Overwhelm is not too many options; it is unstructured chaos plus a tight timeline. Work moves through three levels (understanding, optimisation, automation): understand the principle, build a trained AI project that improves with each correction until you do the work of ten people, then let automation run the business so work becomes optional.
- Package and name your signature method before building the low-ticket rung. The method feeds ideas, feedback and content for every other product, and you often underestimate it: the six-phase meditation began as an addendum to a book before an R&B star and an NBA player found it on YouTube.
- Inspiration hedges its bets. Vishen reads from Elizabeth Gilbert's Big Magic on 'multiple discovery': the same idea whispers to several people, and the one who acts is the one the universe resources, so the seed of a method you are sitting on should be put out into the world, even free, to see what people say.
- Understand your market through open-ended questions, not spreadsheets. Ask people to hit record and speak for five or ten minutes, feed the answers to AI, and turn the analysis into an 'agent guide' that every AI you use reads so your slides, emails and offers respect where your audience actually is.
- On your website, the signature offer sits below a free or low-priced invitation (a masterclass, a quiz, a sample). 'Low' is relative to the market: $99 is cheap for a business tool and expensive for a parenting course. Mindvalley's meditation site uses a quiz that leads to seven free days and then a subscription.
- AI organises thought; it does not replace the coach. A good coach is presence, felt energy and intuitive response, none of which the AI has. Vishen describes himself as an intuition trainer who happens to be a computer scientist, and refusing AI in business today is like refusing laptops.
- Authority cannot be guaranteed for one specific topic, because your first bet may not hold your interest (Vishen lost interest in being a webinar authority). What can be guaranteed is that once you learn the method you can point it at manifesting, meditation, AI or whatever comes next.

Three levels of work

1. Understanding: learn the principle (for example Cialdini's levels of influence, basic copywriting) without trying to become the master yourself
2. Optimisation: build a trained AI project that becomes the master, correct its first rough outputs, and let it learn your voice until you do the work of ten people
3. Automation: the AI monitors your goals, calendar, inbox and numbers and keeps you focused, so overwhelm disappears and work becomes optional

Three brains for accelerated learning

1. Your human mind, which supplies the stories, personality, presence and heart
2. An AI brain: a map of your notes, ideas and knowledge that can be searched for idea collisions
3. An AI companion with its own personality that listens to meetings, studies lessons for you, understands your learning gaps and drafts outputs like a chief of staff

Organic path to high-ticket sales

1. Instagram Reels to grab attention
2. Long-form YouTube videos (or a podcast) where the customer spends 30 minutes to two hours with you, sometimes across five to seven videos
3. Direct invitation from the long-form content to the high-end coaching or programme

Open-ended market research with AI

1. Build a simple quiz with a few factual questions (location, income) and one open-ended question
2. Ask people to click record and speak for five to ten minutes rather than type
3. Feed the responses to AI and ask it to analyse the audience's emotional state, frustrations and blocks
4. Turn the analysis into an agent guide that every AI project you run reads before producing anything

Website layering

1. Top of page: a free or low-priced entry point such as 'watch my masterclass', 'take the quiz' or a sample
2. Below it: the signature offer for people who are ready
3. Price the entry point relative to your market, and let the free taste lead directly into the paid product

THE CONVERSATION

- Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani) The most upvoted question, from Dinesh, Deepti, Sarah and others: is this for me if I'm a beginner, pre-revenue, just starting?
- Vishen Lakhiani Yes, as long as you know directionally what you want to be known for. You might be a founder already earning from your company but pre-revenue as an authority, or an employee who is brilliant at something and wants to start teaching it. If you still don't know whether you want to do longevity or meditation, find your niche first, because otherwise you'll be stuck.
- Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani) Zoe, Rachel and Katherine ask: can you grow a high-ticket coaching programme with only organic marketing? I can't afford ads.
- Vishen Lakhiani Absolutely. Become known for your thing on YouTube or Instagram, but remember Instagram only grabs attention; the customer needs to spend 30 minutes to two hours with you in long-form YouTube before they buy high-end. Daniel Priestley and Jay Shetty both do this, and it's all organic.
- Jason Goldberg Annalisa asks: beyond automation and audience growth, what internal or identity shift do you need to make to step into your own authority and positioning?
- Vishen Lakhiani The shift is your rate of learning: how rapidly you learn, connect ideas and bring two disparate ideas together, which we call idea collision. We teach a new way of learning where you have your human mind, an AI brain and an AI companion that studies for you, and I'll show you how mine digested a four-hour Daniel Priestley lesson I never watched and turned it into a plan my team is now running.
- Jason Goldberg Someone in the chat says this would kill human coaching.
- Vishen Lakhiani No. The AI doesn't have your stories, your personality, your eye contact, your vibe or your energy. A good coach is presence, felt energy and intuitive response; all the AI is doing is organising thought. Notice how quickly it found the most important question tonight, but the response came from my heart.
- Jason Goldberg Darren asks how we make sure we're not over-committing ourselves to multiple products and services.
- Vishen Lakhiani I teach three levels of work: understanding, optimisation and automation. Understand the principle, then build an AI project that becomes the master and improves with every correction until you do the work of ten people; then decide whether to do ten people's work or stop working Fridays. Overwhelm isn't too many options, it's unstructured chaos and a tight timeline, so remove the timeline first.
- Jason Goldberg Sylvie has decades of expertise and a strong network, doesn't want a massive company or to be a full-time content creator, and creates transformational leadership experiences. What's the minimum viable ecosystem to expand her reach without diluting human connection?

Vishen Lakhiani	I don't want to answer without understanding her business, so I'll feed her website into an AI project trained on funnel design across the top expert businesses and we'll come back to it. Ideally you use AI to analyse and map everything and also have the one-on-one conversation; the analysis came back proposing a specific funnel model and a set of questions Sylvie should answer in her own AI, which we'll send her.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Does it work for B2B or only B2C?
Vishen Lakhiani	The same process works for B2B. Sometimes the platform shifts, for example more LinkedIn than Instagram, but the same principles of building a funnel and a business apply.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Joan Francisco asks several times: are missed sessions recorded?
Vishen Lakhiani	Yes, all sessions are recorded and you get them, along with detailed student notes in the classroom. You can also ask the AI companion how to apply a lesson to your own company given everything it knows about you, and it will do that even if you never read the notes.
Jason Goldberg	Miles already has an audience, a monthly live event, an email list and a high-touch practice combining nervous-system, somatic and parts work. Should he name and package the signature method first, or build the low-ticket rung and let it reveal the method?
Vishen Lakhiani	Package the signature method first; it gives you the ideas, feedback and content to build every other rung. My six-phase meditation was only an addendum in my book until I put a video on YouTube and Miguel and Reggie Jackson found it, and it became a national bestseller. Get it out, even free, and see what people say. As Elizabeth Gilbert writes, inspiration whispers to many people and supports the one who acts.
Jason Goldberg	Dr Wala Mohamed asks: at what point should I raise my prices, and what signals (demand, conversion, testimonials, wait lists) tell me my audience is ready without damaging trust?
Vishen Lakhiani	Use pattern recognition rather than spreadsheets. Ask your audience an open-ended question, ideally have them click record and speak for five or ten minutes, feed it into AI and let it analyse where they are; that analysis becomes an agent guide every AI you use reads. Your AIs will then understand your market better than any human, and that understanding tells you what they're ready for.
Jason Goldberg	Dianne asks: given the product ladder you shared, what should be on my website: the signature offer, the low ticket, or what?

- Vishen Lakhiani The signature offer, with an invitation above it to something free or low-priced for people not yet ready: watch my masterclass, take the quiz, buy a sample. Low is relative to your market. On our meditation site a free quiz recommends seven meditations, you get the app free for seven days, and then it becomes a paid subscription; the free taste leads directly to paying.
- Jason Goldberg Dr Ezequiel Newbery says he's already making $100K a year. Is Mastery useful for him? He wants to scale and make full use of AI.
- Vishen Lakhiani If you're making over $100K as an author there's a level beyond Mastery called the Guild, modelled on medieval guilds where craftsmen shared best practices. It's 90 people by application, many of them Mindvalley authors; each commits to sharing one key insight a month in the group, I teach one advanced lesson a month, and everyone signs an NDA. That's where you're in the same room with Marisa Peer, Regan Hillyer and me.
- Jason Goldberg Dawn Grant had a $270-a-month course bringing in $10,000 a month from a free web class and word of mouth. She switched to a $5,000 lifetime price, sold $25,000 in three months and nothing since, then tried tiers and a subscription with minimal sales. Any advice?
- Vishen Lakhiani It's tricky and I need to see the business and the campaign before diagnosing, because it could be a lot of things. I've put her website and question into my AI; it has come back with a pricing analysis that's too complex, so I'll have it explain it simply and we'll share it tomorrow.
- Jason Goldberg Andrea asks whether becoming an authority is guaranteed if we follow the teachings. It seems everyone else got big because Vishen hand-selected them.
- Vishen Lakhiani I do spot potential, but selecting someone isn't what made them big; I had to put them through a process. Bert Goldman's Quantum Jumping started as a lunch conversation about a little book, and the method turned it into a million-dollar launch. I can't guarantee authority in one specific thing, because you may lose interest, but I can guarantee that once you learn the method you can apply it to many different fields.
- Jason Goldberg Someone in the chat asks which level of Claude subscription they need.
- Vishen Lakhiani There are so many options that you should ask Claude itself: describe how you're using it and ask what level you'd need. AI is very honest about that.
- Jason Goldberg Some attendees are saying they don't like AI.
- Vishen Lakhiani AI is just the accelerator; it's like saying you want to be an expert but you don't like laptops. You can use pen and paper, and I respect that, but I can't teach business today without teaching the latest tools. I'm an intuition trainer who happens to be a computer scientist, so you get both.

“A good coach is more than just articulation. A good coach is presence.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“All the AI is doing is organizing bulk information to increase your intelligence.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“But overwhelm is not so much multitude of options. It's unstructured chaos in your brain and a tight timeline.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“So sometimes, we often don't see how powerful something so simple that we've figured out can be to someone else.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Once you learn the method, you can point it. It's like a weapon you can point, a beautiful, gracious, conscious weapon you can point in many different directions.”

Vishen Lakhiani

Your next steps

1. Write your niche in one line, even if it is vague, and confirm you are pre-revenue rather than pre-direction.
2. Name your signature method and publish one piece of content teaching it, free, to see what people say.
3. Add one open-ended, voice-recorded question to your next audience survey and feed the answers into an AI to build a short audience brief.
4. Rearrange your homepage so a free or low-priced entry point (masterclass, quiz or sample) sits above your signature offer.

KEYNOTE · DANIEL PRIESTLEY · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

The Predictable Weekly Cadence

Daniel Priestley gave you a one-page marketing strategy you can run as a one-person business: Short Form, Long Form, Lead Form, posted every single day so the new AI-driven recommendation engines can match you with your ideal customers. You learned the two rules of familiarity (11 exposures in 90 days, then 2 to 7 hours of content to earn trust), how to structure the content that does each job, and how to build the product and service ecosystem that turns that attention into revenue, and why, underneath the strategy, the real game is bringing your life force to the people you serve.

KEY IDEAS

- Social media has moved from the social graph (your posts go to friends and family) through the interest graph (whatever is trending, like a Ferrari on fire) to the semantic graph, where AI understands what your post is about and matches it to the people who are already interested. Daniel called it a magical telephone and a free call centre: you only need to tell it the problem you solve (your intellectual property or signature method) and who it is for (your ideal customer persona). Short-form video is the frontier model of this technology: YouTube alone serves about 200 billion short videos a day (up from 5 billion a few years ago), roughly 500 billion a day across all platforms, for about 5 billion people with fast internet. You can consume that attention or create with it.
- The old formula was product or service, then physical location, then a business brand. All three are weakening: products get compared on price (as airlines did once comparison sites arrived), location no longer limits who you can serve, and business brands get almost no attention online. The new formula is IP + ICP + PSE + Personal Brand: intellectual property, ideal customer persona, product and service ecosystem, and a personal brand that earns the attention. Every Mindvalley teacher you have heard this weekend is running this same formula. A personal brand is about 20 times more powerful than a business brand; posting from a faceless brand is like paying a 95 per cent attention tax. One footballer has more followers than all the football clubs combined, Richard Branson has millions where Virgin has a couple of hundred thousand, and Steven Bartlett has 3 million on LinkedIn versus under 50,000 for Diary of a CEO. People trust the person (Tim Cook), buy the product (iPhone) and commit to the business (Apple), in that order.
- Your intellectual property is your baggage: the triumphs and struggles of the last 5 to 10 years. AI can synthesise any textbook or PhD-level research, but it has never lived a day, so your lived stories are the human advantage. You are too close to see the value, like standing on a mountain and being unable to see the mountain. Imperfections are what make people relate, as John Cleese said of great characters.
- Two rules to live by. First: people see you for the first time when they see you for the 11th time, and it has to happen within 90 days, so posting once a week is below the minimum effective dose. Post at least once a day, 5 to 7 days a week (Daniel himself aims for about 200 posts a month, 3 to 5 a day, on each platform). Second: people trust you after consuming 2 to 7 hours of your content (drawing on Google's research and Professor Robin Dunbar's work on acquaintance).

- Short form (15 to 180 seconds) names your ideal customer, says what you do for them, and rotates through Pain, Prize, Problem, News to stop the scroll, then points to longer content (comment a word, a link in the description, or a short post followed by a 4 to 6 minute video). Instagram, LinkedIn and YouTube are enough to take you to your first 1 to 5 million in revenue.
- Long form (6 to 90 minutes) wins trust with Proof, Principles, Process, and switches on the light bulb moments your customer is missing. Climb the podcast pyramid: be a guest on shows under 1,000 views and drive your episode past 1,000, then the 1,000 to 10,000 tier, then 10,000 to 100,000, then 100,000 plus, then a million plus. Daniel has appeared on Diary of a CEO eight times with 40 to 50 million views, and one recent video clocked 46,000 hours of watch time, the equivalent of 20 years of one person's working hours or 20 salespeople working for a year.
- Lead form: nobody fills in a form for a stranger, but they will after long-form content. Have at least four ways to engage (contact form, self-assessment or scorecard, workshop registration, a waitlist for something coming, a special offer for something disappearing). Capture NEPAL (name, email, phone, location) plus segmentation data about their current situation, desired outcome, obstacle and preferred solution.
- The product and service ecosystem has four parts: a gift (your free long-form content), a product for prospects (an online assessment or a book), a core offer in gold, silver and bronze (done for you, done with you, do it yourself), and a product for clients for the ongoing relationship. Daniel's Key Person of Influence Scorecard was taken by 90,000 people and produced about 20 million dollars in sales; Nora switched her traffic from her core offer to an assessment and made two and a half million pounds in the following months; a 48-question assessment won him a celebrity coaching client with 22 million followers within 48 hours. Gabriela Rosa gave away 1,000, then 2,000, then 4,000 copies of her book Fertility Breakthrough and grew from 700,000 to 4.7 million dollars a year. One client's weekly live Q&A membership at 39 pounds a month with 250 members brings in about 117,000 pounds a year. Zooming out, the industrial age wanted you to be a reliable can opener; the digital age wants your vitality, so be the irreplaceable life force for a specific outcome and community, and be a directionalist, not a perfectionist.

Short Form, Long Form, Lead Form

1. Short form (15 to 180 seconds) to get attention: name your ideal customer persona, say what you do for them, and share a pain, a prize, a problem or news; post every day.
2. Long form (6 to 90 minutes: videos, podcasts, a book) to build trust: deliver Proof, Principles, Process and the light bulb moments your buyer is missing.
3. Lead form to capture the lead and start the product ladder: a dedicated page whose only job is to get the form filled in.

The new formula: IP + ICP + PSE + Personal Brand

1. IP: your intellectual property or signature method, drawn from your lived experience.
2. ICP: your ideal customer persona, the intended audience.
3. PSE: your product and service ecosystem, the product ladder that sits underneath the IP and ICP.
4. Personal brand: where the attention comes from, instead of a business brand.

11 Interactions and 7 Hours

1. People notice you for the first time when they see you for the 11th time, and it must happen within 90 days.
2. People trust you after consuming 2 to 7 hours of your content.
3. Build a system that clocks up both so people notice, know and trust you and are ready to engage.

Pain, Prize, Problem, News

1. Pain: the frustration or struggle they feel right now.
2. Prize: the result they want.
3. Problem: the obstacle that explains why most people do not get the result.
4. News: what is already trending and being looked at.
5. Rotate through the four, one post a day.

Proof, Principles, Process

1. Proof that you know what you are talking about.
2. Universal principles they can learn from.
3. A process for getting the result or working with you.

The Podcast Pyramid

1. Guest on small podcasts under 1,000 views and promote your episode past 1,000.
2. Move up to shows in the 1,000 to 10,000 range and drive your episode past 10,000.
3. Then 10,000 to 100,000, driving past 100,000.
4. Then 100,000 plus, then a million plus.

Lead form data: NEPAL plus segmentation

1. Contact information: Name, Email, Phone, Location (NEPAL).
2. Which best describes your current situation?
3. Which best describes the outcome you want to achieve?
4. Which best describes the struggle or problem you are trying to overcome?
5. Which best describes the solution you think would suit you?
6. Is there anything else you want me to know?

Four products and services

1. Gift: free value that gets attention (your long-form content).
2. Product for prospects: what people fill in the lead form for, ideally an online assessment or a book.
3. Core offer: your main revenue product, in gold (done for you), silver (done with you) and bronze (do it yourself).
4. Product for clients: the ongoing relationship, such as a membership or subscription.

THE CONVERSATION

- Jason Goldberg Most experts create content whenever they feel inspired, which means it's inconsistent and it kills your authority. Daniel's going to teach you the weekly system, the repeatable cadence that builds your audience whether you feel like it or not. Please welcome Daniel Priestley.
- Daniel Priestley Jason, thank you very much for a very wonderful introduction. I spent the last 25 years building and selling companies. I've had seven startups that went zero to a million in the first 12 months, and I've been sharing what I know in books like Key Person of Influence. I want to share with you some of the best thinking I've got right now about what to do in the year ahead.
- Daniel Priestley Out of curiosity, are you enjoying this? Are you getting key ideas? Let me know in the chat what's been your biggest light bulb moment so far, so I can spend some time on this product and service ecosystem.
- Daniel Priestley Some of you are feeling a little bit overwhelmed, I can see that. Don't be. I'm giving you a lot, but we've got plenty of time to implement this. When people get overwhelmed, it's because they want it to be done. All you have to do is keep moving in the right direction. Be a directionalist, not a perfectionist.
- Daniel Priestley If you think it's about short form, long form, lead form, you've actually missed the point. The real reason we do this is life-force energy: to play a bigger game, make a bigger impact and raise the vitality in your community and on the planet. I'll hand back to Jason.

Jason Goldberg

Thank you so much, Daniel. Who here is feeling their life force big time right now? I love that he made that distinction, separating the strategies and practices from the real underlying principle: how do we bring our life force to the world and activate more of it in the people we want to serve?

"You just have to talk passionately about the problem that you solve and the intended audience of who it's for, and let AI do the rest."

Daniel Priestley

"And you're standing on top of a mountain of value, but sometimes you're too close to see it."

Daniel Priestley

"People see you for the first time when they see you for the 11th time."

Daniel Priestley

"Don't promote what you do, promote the assessment. That is the product for prospects."

Daniel Priestley

"The book that changes your life is not one that you read, it's one that you write."

Daniel Priestley

TRY THIS

- This week, spend time pausing, reflecting and documenting your last 5 to 6 years: What is the underlying theme? Why do people come back to you with questions? What do people at a dinner party want to know more about? What problems can you solve easily that others struggle with? Ground every answer in a real story, including the struggles.
- Prompt your AI assistant: 'I want to develop some intellectual property that's unique to me. Ideally I will have a signature method and a unique name for what I offer. Based on my story, my experiences, my triumphs and struggles, please ask me questions to help me uncover some potential signature content that's mine.'
- Prompt: 'I'm developing some short-form videos to promote my business. Based on what you know about me, help me develop scripts that will engage my perfect clients. I want to hook attention, deliver something of value, and get people to comment a word in exchange for longer, more detailed content. Ask me any clarifying questions, then begin creating short-form video scripts.'
- Prompt: 'Based on what you know about my core offer, what are the 10 beliefs someone would have to have in order to enthusiastically buy from me?' Treat those as the 10 light bulbs your long-form content must switch on.
- Brand audit prompt: 'Search online for content featuring me. How would AI build an understanding of my current personal brand, in particular my intended audience, my offer, my points of difference, whether I am perceived as a key person of influence, and the total amount of content that can easily be found and consumed?'
- Design your assessment: if someone is not sure whether they could get value from you, what 15 or so questions would help them become sure? Then promote the assessment rather than the offer.

Your next steps

1. Commit to one short-form post a day, 5 to 7 days a week, on Instagram, LinkedIn and YouTube, rotating Pain, Prize, Problem, News and ending each with a pointer to longer content.
2. Record or schedule one piece of long-form content (a 10 to 30 minute step-by-step video, or pitch yourself to a small podcast in your niche) built around Proof, Principles, Process.
3. Set up at least one lead form this week, ideally a self-assessment scorecard, capturing name, email, phone and location plus the segmentation questions.
4. Run the four AI prompts above and keep the outputs as the start of your signature method and your brand audit.

KEYNOTE · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

The Funnel That Runs While You Sleep

Vishen Lakhiani told you the origin story of the masterclass, from a 2008 blog and Skype interviews to a model that has sold well over half a billion dollars, and then broke down exactly how a 60-minute masterclass teaches and sells at the same time. You learned the two things to lock in before you write a word (the core belief and the villain), the what-why-when-never-how rule, a minute-by-minute script structure, the Nine Agreements your script must secure, and the three-part skeleton to check every time: belief, villain, experience.

KEY IDEAS

- The email list is the most valuable asset an expert can build, more valuable than fans or a YouTube channel. In 2008 Vishen's blog Finer Minds captured emails with a free e-book; today your Instagram link in bio and your YouTube channel should do the same job. He was an enthusiast, not an expert, on a tiny niche (remote viewing), acting as the translation layer between the experts and ordinary readers, and that built the widest audience in the niche. The first masterclass was an hour-long Skype audio interview with an author: free, pointing people to the author's course, with a 50 per cent affiliate deal. That first interview generated 100,000 dollars for Vishen (200,000 in sales) and within 18 months he had done 980,000 dollars from audio interviews on a blog. Combining the interview format with the telesummit model for Burt Goldman's Quantum Jumping produced the first million-dollar launch; the programme still sells today. Even people who do not buy join the list, which is how the list grew to 2 million. It also shows there are two career paths: be the teacher, or be the host. Vishen was the host, not the teacher, from 2004 to 2014.
- A masterclass teaches and sells at once by giving the what, the why and the when while inviting people to buy to get the how. It is 60 minutes: the first 45 educate, the last 15 sell. It is scripted word for word and read from a teleprompter, because randomness delays the sale and loses attention.
- Lock in two things before writing. First, the core belief: people are not buying your product, they are buying a belief, and the whole masterclass shapes that one belief (for example, 'You don't manifest what you want, you manifest what you broadcast' for Regan Hillyer; 'Intuition is activated at the alpha level' for Silva; for a binaural-beats meditation product, 'Going into meditative states is not random; it can be enhanced with sound technology'). If someone could hold the belief and still not buy, it is the wrong belief. Depending on market sophistication, the belief usually includes your mechanism.

- Second, the villain: never blame the user. If people fall asleep in meditation, the villain is social media training our brains for short attention spans; if people are addicted to sugar, the villain is big food putting sugar in around 70 per cent of grocery products (Vishen cited Dr Mark Hyman and a pro-sugar study funded by PepsiCo and Weight Watchers). It is empathetic and fact-based: 'It's not your fault, it's big food.'
- Teach what, why and when, never how. For meditation: what it is, why it matters, when to do it (five minutes at night, six in the morning), but the audio technology, the countdown method and how to sit are in the paid programme. For a sugar-craving supplement: what it is, why it works, when to take it, with case studies, and the product is the how. In a 12-hour summit you can teach the how, and what you sell instead is the step-by-step application.
- Every gift opens a gap in the same breath it closes one. Generosity without tension makes people satisfied, and satisfied people do not enrol; you want them grateful and hungry. Examples: the Quantum Jumping masterclass led people through a quantum jump for health and offered the collection (money, soulmate, sleep, ideal body) for 199 dollars; free samples of his Bliss supplement at events; cheese cubes on toothpicks in a supermarket. Tell them what you told them before you ask.
- The centrepiece is a guided experience, and a before-and-after self-score makes the shift visible: score your energy 1 to 10, do a 15-minute Qigong technique, score again, then ask what 30 days could do. Vishen ran it live: how confident were you before the summit that you could build a million-dollar expert business in three years (many said 0 to 3) versus now on Day 3 (many said 6 to 10).
- The Nine Agreements your script must secure, and an ask distribution map of no fewer than 25 requests and invitations through the class, framed as invitations, not pushy sales. For 'I need to act now', use a discount that only exists on that page (for example 50 dollars off that disappears if the page is closed) or genuine urgency around health, family or career, never fake urgency.

What, Why, When, never How

1. Teach the what: what the thing is, with scientific legitimacy and data.
2. Teach the why: why it works or why the problem matters.
3. Teach the when: when to apply it.
4. Never teach the how: the protocol, the breath count, the body scan, the technique. That is the programme they buy.

Masterclass minute-by-minute breakdown

1. Minutes 0 to 10: plant the belief, name the villain, make the promise.
2. Minutes 10 to 17: case studies and testimonials, ask for a commitment (put away your phone, give me your best attention), and spell out the cost of the problem.
3. Minutes 17 to 24: the paradigm shift, where you name your mechanism (for example active meditation versus clearing your mind) and make the first soft ask.
4. Then content and guided experience: the what, why and when, plus a short taste (a 7-minute version of a 22-minute meditation).
5. Minutes 36 to 46: the gift with a gap (tell them what you told them), the yes ladder (did you enjoy it? could this take you further? could you do this in 6 minutes a morning?), hint at the hole.
6. Then the sale: stack the value, state the price, give a fair guarantee, address objections (recordings, location), make the ask.

The Nine Agreements

1. The problem is serious enough to solve now.
2. What I have been doing cannot work.
3. The reason is something I did not know, so it is not my fault.
4. This person understands me better than I understand myself.
5. There is a different solution, and it has a name.
6. The specific solution is proven (case studies, testimonials).
7. I can see myself succeeding, and I am now allowed to hope (the guided experience and score increase).
8. Not doing this will cost me more than doing this.
9. I need to act now.

Masterclass skeleton: three checks every time

1. The belief: write down your core belief.
2. The villain: who or what you blame, never the user.
3. The experience: the guided experience that lets people feel the shift.

THE CONVERSATION

Jason Goldberg

Way before Oprah ever used the word masterclass, he was the guy who coined the term, all the way back in 2008. That single webinar did a million dollars in launch revenue from a blog, and since then he has sold roughly half a billion dollars through masterclasses alone. Vishen, take it away.

- Vishen Lakhiani One of the things Jason said is slightly incorrect. Oprah used the word masterclass first, for a TV show. I borrowed that word and used it for a webinar. I started calling my interviews masterclasses and I started refining it.
- Vishen Lakhiani Would you like to try this? If you have a masterclass, what is your core belief? Write it in the chat. You don't have to get it right now, we're going to go deeper. But one belief.
- Audience member Is this manipulative?
- Vishen Lakhiani No, because the villain is real. Social media, based on science, is causing people's attention spans to go down. In fact, it's empathetic. If you go to a therapist, is the therapist going to blame you? Nobody wants to be blamed.
- Vishen Lakhiani At the beginning of this summit, how confident did you feel that you could build an expert business doing a million in revenue in the next three years? Put a score in the chat. A lot of people are saying 0, 3, 1. Now, on Day 3, what is that score? Now it's going up to 6, 7, 8, and a lot of people are saying 10. If your score increased in just a few days of training, imagine what happens with four months.

"The most valuable thing you can create as an expert is your email list. It is more valuable than your fans."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Your masterclass doesn't cover multiple things, it shapes one belief. If they can hold a belief and still not buy, it's the wrong belief."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Every gift opens a gap in the same breath, it closes one. This is the delicate dance between giving and asking."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Generosity without tension makes people satisfied. Satisfied people do not enroll in your program. You want them grateful and hungry."

Vishen Lakhiani

"You don't manifest what you want, you manifest what you broadcast. This is the core belief."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- Write your core belief in one sentence: the single belief someone must hold to buy from you. Test it: if they could hold this belief and still not buy, rewrite it.
- Name your villain: the external cause of your customer's problem that is true, fact-based and lets you say 'it's not your fault'.
- Design your guided experience and a before-and-after score (1 to 10) so people feel the shift inside the class.
- Check your script against the Nine Agreements and count your invitations; aim for no fewer than 25 across the hour.

Your next steps

1. Put an email sign-up on your Instagram link in bio and your YouTube channel this week, with a free e-book, meditation or lesson as the reason to join.
2. Draft the first 10 minutes of your masterclass: belief, villain, promise, using the minute-by-minute breakdown as your outline.
3. Decide whether you will be the teacher or the host, and if host, list three authors or experts you could interview for your first masterclass.
4. Sort your material into what, why and when (free) versus how (paid).

FIRESIDE CHAT · REGAN HILLYER & VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

How Regan Hillyer Built her Empire

Joining from Bali at 1am, Regan Hillyer sat down with Vishen Lakhiani to trace her path from a 23-year-old attendee at a Mindvalley event to a business on track for around $50 million this year. Vishen drew the entire manifesting funnel on screen, from three-minute videos and quizzes through the masterclass, autoresponder emails and a $5,000 Mastery, and Regan explained how she mirrors the same architecture in her own business, right up to a $1 million coaching package. You also heard her honest answers on content days she skips, how she handles overwhelm, and what keeps her building.

KEY IDEAS

- Regan's growth: when she first came to a Mindvalley event more than ten years ago she was doing just over $100,000 a year. Today her company is on track for around $50 million this year, built layer by layer over 14 years.
- Claim your crown. Regan and Vishen looked up 'manifesting' as an industry years ago, found there was nothing there, and decided to claim the space. Nobody appoints you the expert; you choose the crown you put on and then get guidance on how to wear it.
- The mindset shift that scaled the business was connecting it to something bigger than herself. Around the first $1 to 3 million most founders realise they can have everything they want and ask 'why keep going?'; Regan's answer was to leave the planet better than she found it. Her end game is to impact over a billion people, and every decision becomes a simple question: does this move the dial closer to that vision, or is it a distraction?
- Service comes before scale. In 2018, when a Mindvalley cacao ceremony ran out of space, Regan rented a yoga studio and bought cacao with her own money so 250 people could attend for free; that is when Vishen gave her a bigger stage, and within two years of publishing her first programme, The Art of Manifesting became the number one programme on Mindvalley. Vishen calls this expansion energy: some teachers make everything they touch grow, while others meet every idea with 'but what if?'. Regan sets a deliberate intention to be a category of one, and her ratings are not luck.

- Vishen's manifesting funnel, which does around $20 million a year: three-minute videos, Google search ads and a quiz lead to a page showing the free, mid-tier and high-end stack. Most people take the free masterclass; 1 to 3% buy the course or subscription, and the other 97% enter a 14-day autoresponder that gives away the best lessons and the best meditation. Then 21 days after purchase students are offered Lifebook, over three months they see $2,000 weekend classes, and around six months in they are invited to a summit where Manifesting Mastery ($5,000) is offered, typically a $5 million launch with a satisfaction score above 80. Timing, not pushing.
- Collect stories. The Art of Manifesting has 172 published student stories and Manifesting Mastery 286. Vishen values each story at $5,000 to $10,000 because customers bring in more customers. Regan says not capturing client wins five to seven years ago cost her a lot of money.
- Regan's two fundamentals: get your clients crazy results (over-deliver massively on free and low-ticket offers at $22, $55 and $97 so trust builds fast) and have a very clear sales pathway. Her offers step from free to a $100,000 mastermind, a $200,000 platinum container and a $1 million one-on-one coaching package, built layer by layer over 14 years; one container she started four and a half months ago has seen its clients generate over $64 million in cash between them.
- On hard days Regan simply does not create content and renegotiates the deadline with her team. On overwhelm: write every item out, find the one thing that creates movement, and remind yourself the world will not explode if the list waits until tomorrow.

The manifesting funnel (as drawn by Vishen)

1. Traffic: three-minute videos, Google search ads and a quiz such as 'What is your manifesting archetype?'
2. Audience page showing the product stack: free (masterclass, e-book), mid-tier (courses and subscription, summit), high-end (Mastery at $5,000)
3. Free masterclass, built on the formula taught earlier in the summit
4. 1 to 3% buy the course or the subscription; the other 97% receive a free e-book
5. 14-day autoresponder giving the best lessons and the best meditation from the course for free
6. 21 days after purchase, introduce a second product (Lifebook, a goal-setting programme)
7. Over 3 months, introduce related $2,000 weekend classes
8. Around 6 months, invite to a summit where the $5,000 Mastery is offered
9. Collect and publish student stories throughout; each one brings new customers

Regan's two fundamentals

1. Get your clients really crazy results: over-deliver on free and low-ticket offers ($22, $55, $97) so they get a fast result and trust you
2. Have a very clear sales pathway from free to your highest offer, with a next step for anyone not yet ready ('not ready for $10,000? here is the $2,000 offer')

Regan's story engine

1. Capture every client win and story as it happens
2. Feed the stories to your marketing team
3. Turn them into social media posts
4. Give them to the sales team so they can answer objections with a real story
5. Let the system compound so it grows without you

Regan's overwhelm reset

1. Recognise overwhelm is just your system trying to process too many options at once
2. Write everything in your head out on paper or in a journal, until the list is complete (Regan's often hit 37 items)
3. Ask: what is the one thing right now that will create movement in my company? Usually an offer, a sales process or a client result
4. Commit to that one or two things only
5. Tell yourself: if the rest is not done today, the world will not explode. Breathe and do it tomorrow

The product step ladder (Vishen's recap)

1. Each offer is roughly 5X the previous: $99, then $500, then $5,000, then $25,000
2. The best teachers extend it further: Regan goes to $100,000, then $250,000, then $1 million
3. The higher rungs are justified by the value delivered, for example helping a CEO grow a $100 million company by 10%

THE CONVERSATION

Vishen Lakhiani You look amazing, as always. Regan, where in the world are you right now, and what's going on there?

Regan Hillyer I'm in Bali, Indonesia. I just finished two events: I surprised one of my mastermind communities with a four-day retreat and basically threw them a party, then I flew 21 of my team members in and for three days I celebrated them. There was one rule: we don't talk about work, we celebrate the vision and everything we're creating.

Vishen Lakhiani

Here's the crazy story about Regan: at one point she was completely broke. I was living in Malaysia, where I take my family to Sunday brunch and invite anyone along, and Regan joined us at 23; I told her to attend the Mindvalley event, she did, she kept coming, and one day I put her on stage. Look at these pictures: a standing ovation a few months ago, Jay Shetty handing her the award in Dubai in January 2025 for the most popular programme on Mindvalley, The Art of Manifesting, and then Regan 12 years ago, sitting in the audience with half her head shaved. Today, at 36, she owns 700 acres in Costa Rica and is building a wellness resort, so before the nitty-gritty, share with the audience what you've built and why this is such an interesting career path.

Regan Hillyer

When I first came on that stage I was such a baby, and I've really grown up with Mindvalley; I've built a massive company on my own back end, but when I ask people where they first heard of me, it's Mindvalley, Mindvalley, Mindvalley. At that first event I'd just started my company and was doing just over $100,000 a year, and now we're on track for around $50 million this year, in a ten-year period. But my company wouldn't have grown unless I had claimed the space of being the expert in manifesting: people call me the queen of manifesting, and I tell them you have to choose what crown you are putting on, because no one is going to put it on you. I remember sitting in your apartment years ago looking up manifesting as an industry, finding it wasn't really there, and deciding we needed to claim it.

Vishen Lakhiani

Let me play a video from 2018, when Regan's cacao ceremony at a Mindvalley event drew so many people that we ran out of space; with her own money she rented a yoga studio and bought cacao, and 250 people crammed in for free. When I see a teacher who is there to serve, I know it's not just about the money, so I gave her a bigger stage the next year, she got a standing ovation, and that's when I asked, 'If we published a programme with you, what would we call it?' I also told her I suspected she had a certain energy: there's an energy in a human being that causes everything they touch to expand, and another that causes everything to shrink and hit barriers, and within two years her first programme became the number one programme on Mindvalley. Many experts meet every idea with 'but what if this?', while Regan is constantly looking at what could expand.

Regan Hillyer

I'm looking at what could expand, and it's very intentional. When your team noticed my talks are always so highly rated and asked whether I set an intention around that, I said, of course: I want to deliver the best content possible because I want to be of the most useful service, so why would I not set an intention for mastery? You can be just another teacher, or you can choose to claim your place and be a category of one, because there's only one of you, your frequency, your gifts, your life story. Any rating or how well a programme does is not luck or chance; all of the manifestation energy is zeroed in on it.

Vishen Lakhiani

Now let me show the audience what the Regan Hillyer business looks like on Mindvalley. Traffic comes from three-minute videos of Regan, Google search ads and a quiz, all leading to a page that shows our manifesting stack of free, mid-tier and high-end; most people go to the free masterclass, only 1 to 3% buy the course or subscription, and the other 97% go into a 14-day autoresponder where we give away the best lessons and the best meditation from the course. Then 21 days after they buy we introduce Lifebook, over three months we introduce $2,000 weekend classes, and around six months in we invite them to a manifesting summit where they can join Manifesting Mastery at $5,000, typically a $5 million launch with a satisfaction score over 80, while collecting stories all the way (172 for The Art of Manifesting, 286 for the Mastery, each worth another $5,000 to $10,000 to us). That's how we do 20 million a year in manifesting, so Regan, how do you leverage this traffic and build your $50 million business on your end?

Regan Hillyer

It's very similar on my back end. We never front up with a mastermind or a multi-thousand-dollar programme; we come in at free or with low-ticket offers at $22, $55 or $97, and my hack is to massively over-deliver, because if I can get someone a fast result at $22 they build trust and the next step at $2,000, $5,000 or $50,000 becomes a no-brainer. If someone isn't ready for a $10,000 offer, no problem, there's a $2,000 offer over here; timing is everything. Two things make it work: get your clients really crazy results, and have a very clear sales pathway. And the testimonials: five to seven years ago I wasn't capturing client stories and it cost me so much money, so now they feed my marketing team, then social media, then the sales team, and the whole engine compounds without me.

Vishen Lakhiani

Regan, what is your highest value offering?

Regan Hillyer

A million-dollar one-on-one premium coaching package. A layer down is my platinum mastermind container at $200,000 for the year, where clients get my phone number and we chat daily, then a mastermind around $100,000, and then all the way down to $55, $22 and free. That range wasn't built overnight; it's a 14-year build of layer after layer, listening to clients and scaling as they scale. One container I started four and a half months ago, created because clients kept asking for help with certain things, and between them those clients have since generated over $64 million in cash.

Vishen Lakhiani

Pay attention to that: remember the product step ladder, where every offer goes up by 5X, $99, $500, $5,000, $25,000? Regan takes it further, to $100,000, a quarter million and one million, and if you're a CEO responsible for $100 million in revenue and Regan can tweak your mindset so your company grows by 10%, that's worth a million. Now some questions I think trip our audience up: do you ever have days where you just don't want to create content, and what do you do on those days?

- Regan Hillyer I just don't create content on those days. I'm a human. Sometimes my team says, 'We need these five videos by Monday,' and if I don't feel like it I say, 'I can get them to you by Wednesday,' and we adjust in the flow. If something is really important, like Mindvalley needing me at 1am, I break my rules and show up. Other times the videos can wait 24 hours until I'm in a better flow.
- Vishen Lakhiani How do you deal with overwhelm? Do you ever experience it?
- Regan Hillyer Not so much anymore, but I used to, especially early on when I was the whole team, the marketing department, the sales, the content creation. I realised overwhelm is just your system trying to process too many options at once. So I'd sit down and write out everything in my head until there were 37 things on the list, then ask, 'What is the one thing right now that will create movement in my company?' It usually came back to an offer, a sales process or helping a client get a great result. I'd commit to that one or two things and tell myself, 'Regan, if the 37-point list isn't done today, the world's not going to explode. Breathe, do it tomorrow.'
- Vishen Lakhiani And the final question, Regan. What's the end game? What legacy are you looking to leave on the planet?
- Regan Hillyer To impact over a billion people, and for them to realise they can create their most ideal reality, that they don't have to trade one thing off for another, and that they can have it all on their terms. When you're aligned like that, life gets very simple. An opportunity shows up and the question is: does this move the dial closer to that vision, or is it a distraction? It's a simple yes or no, and sometimes 'that's big and scary, but I'm going to do it anyway.'

"You have to choose what crown you are putting on, right? No one's going to put that on you."

Regan Hillyer

"At the end of the day, there's only you, your vibration, your frequency, your gifts, your life story, your talents. No one else is gonna do it quite like you."

Regan Hillyer

"I realized that overwhelm is just your system trying to process too many options all at once"

Regan Hillyer

"There's a certain energy in a human being that causes everything they touch to expand."

Vishen Lakhiani

"And that's what I really love about this business, because you're not being pushy. Even people who don't buy from you, you are still changing their lives."

Vishen Lakhiani

TRY THIS

- The overwhelm list: When you feel overloaded, write every task and idea in your head onto one page. Then circle the single item that would create the most movement in your business, usually an offer, a sales process or a client result, and commit to that alone today.

Your next steps

1. Decide what crown you are putting on: write the one-line space you are claiming as the expert, then say it out loud to someone this week.
2. Map your own sales pathway from free to your highest offer, and make sure there is a 'not ready yet? go here' step at every rung.
3. Pick your best single lesson or meditation and give it away in your follow-up emails to the people who did not buy.
4. Set up a simple system to capture every client win as it happens and route it to your marketing and sales.

PROGRAMME OVERVIEW · VISHEN LAKHIANI · HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

How to Move up to the Next Level: Mastery & Masterminds

Vishen explains why Mindvalley is opening up the methods it once reserved for a handful of hand-picked authors, and walks you through the two ways to keep working with him: the Expert to Authority Mastery and an application-only mastermind for experts already earning six figures. Along the way you get genuine teaching on the belief that authority is a replicable method, the 'done or not done' operating mindset, recent conversion discoveries, and a live demonstration of building an autoresponder with a trained AI.

KEY IDEAS

- Mindvalley used to receive around 3,000 author applications a year and choose five. Vishen's new strategy for reaching a billion people is to open up the methodology, webinar system and tools rather than work with authors one at a time.
- Adopt the belief that authority is a replicable method. It is not talent or luck; Vishen has run the same process for over 100 authors, and when you know the method, authority becomes predictable rather than something you hope for.
- You have to solve two problems at once: articulate what you do (phraseology, sequence and teaching technique applied as a science, as with the naming of Regan Hillyer's method and Bert Goldman's Quantum Jumping) and be findable. You do not need a marketing degree; you need the framework and the right AI and marketing tools.
- Precision beats improvisation. The webinar template shared with students is 56 pages and has been refined since 2008 with input from the people who invented the telesummit and wrote the book on webinars; with AI trained on an author's course, a script that once took days now takes about two hours.
- A recent test found a masterclass with only the ums and ahs cut out beat the heavily edited version by 30% in revenue. Vishen's read: fancy edits feel like an ad, simple edits feel real, and publishing the next day instead of 20 days later matters more than polish.

- Ban 'I'm currently doing' from your vocabulary. In Vishen's company work is either done or not done, a signature method or a script is built in one day and then improved, and the goal is massive results in the least time rather than hustle.
- A business grows through three stages: do it yourself, optimise it, automate it. Once you reach automation, you are assembling bricks that connect, and Vishen expects most students to end up with a three- or four-day work week while revenue rises.
- Everyone is now a media company of one. The method works for physical products, supplements, software and B2B as well as courses; only the platform and tone shift (LinkedIn rather than Instagram for B2B). What does not change is that you, the founder, must be the spokesperson rather than staying behind the curtain.
- Your first niche may fail and that is fine. Vishen's first attempt was selling stuffed toys; once you own the method you can point it at another niche. The mental frame matters as much as the method: with 'everything is figureoutable', a roadblock is just a sequence to work out.
- Give the AI the context and it does the heavy lifting: an audience brief built from your survey answers, a training file on the discipline (for example autoresponder design) and a transcript of your book or best talk produce a finished 10- to 14-day sequence in minutes. Ask it clarifying questions rather than just issuing orders.

The two problems behind the authority gap

1. Articulate what you do: name your method, sequence your teaching, make it sticky for the student
2. Be findable: social, ads, webinars, quizzes and email sequences that put you in front of the market
3. Solve both at once using the framework plus the right AI and marketing tools, not a marketing degree

Three stages of building the business

1. Do it yourself: understand the principle and produce the first version
2. Optimise it: build a trained AI project that improves with every correction
3. Automate it: connect the pieces so the business runs and scales without you in the room

Implementation lab protocol (as demonstrated)

1. The teaching call sets out the principle, for example autoresponder design
2. A facilitator turns the lesson into an implementation protocol and training files (MD and skill files) for your AI
3. You install the files, complete a questionnaire and upload your own material (book transcript, best speech, audience brief)
4. The AI asks clarifying questions (length, number of close emails, which product) and produces the finished asset
5. You paste the output into your own system; the asset is ready the same week

Five pillars and milestones of the curriculum

1. Messaging and positioning (weeks 1 to 4, Daniel Priestley on high-value signature offers in week 3)
2. Platform and content
3. Funnel and conversion (by week 10, designing expert funnels with the five stages of funnel design and lead magnets)
4. Scale and products (week 14, high-ticket mastery: selling $3,000 to $10,000 programmes)
5. Legacy and systems (week 17 collaborative partnerships and affiliates; week 18 legacy and impact)

How the expert mastermind shares knowledge

1. A capped group of about 90 experts, by application
2. Each member commits to sharing one test, idea or new insight every month
3. Across 90 members that yields roughly three insights a day
4. Vishen adds one advanced lesson a month drawn from what is working across the Mindvalley ecosystem

THE CONVERSATION

Audience question Is this for me if I'm just starting?
(read by Vishen Lakhiani)

Vishen Lakhiani Yes. The one thing you must have is some idea of the niche you want to try first; it can be vague, and it does not have to be the final one. My first niche was stuffed toys and it failed, but once you learn the system you can try it on a different niche.

Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Does it work if I'm not selling courses or coaching?
Vishen Lakhiani	Absolutely. Nora sells gut-health testing kits; you can use a webinar, an autoresponder or a quiz to sell a physical product, a supplement, a medical service or software. The key is that we are teaching you to be the spokesperson, the known scientist in your field, not to stay behind the curtain.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	I've tried building an audience before and it did not work. Why would this be different?
Vishen Lakhiani	Ask whether you had the right methodology, the right tools, the right allies and the right mental frame. Many people's first thought is 'I'm going to hit a roadblock', so they never try; if you go in believing everything is figureoutable, every roadblock is just a sequence to work out. I'll work with you on both the method and the frame.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	What happens after the 18 weeks?
Vishen Lakhiani	You stay in a community that remains active and supportive. Everyone is on the app, and every member who gives permission can chat with every other member, which in itself is incredibly valuable.
Jason Goldberg	Neelia asks whether you still have access to all the templates after the four months are up.
Vishen Lakhiani	Yes, you do.
Jason Goldberg	Sabine says marketing is her weak spot: she has programmes and frameworks but not the team or tools to get a breakthrough. Will the Mastery help with that?
Vishen Lakhiani	Yes. It has never been easier to set up an authority company of one, and you rarely need to hire. You need to know either the easiest tool for a landing page, quiz or masterclass, or which agency can do it in two or three days at minimal cost, and in the programme we share our favourite tools and experts.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Shami: most programmes like this are B2C. My business is B2B management, reporting and optimisation. Will it work?
Vishen Lakhiani	A large chunk of our previous Mastery students were B2B, and Mindvalley itself sells to corporations and governments. The method is the same; what shifts is the platform (LinkedIn rather than Instagram) and the tone and style of communication.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Is this useful for Jovi, a verified-safe makeup brand for kids?

Vishen Lakhiani	Yes, because you are talking to the parents, and as a parent I immediately ask whether this is safe for my daughter. What is missing from the site is the story and the founder: is that photo the founder or stock photography? Where is the name and the signature? For a controversial product, how you present it decides whether it takes off.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Carolina: I'm still developing my offer, positioning, signature method and case studies. Is this designed to build them from scratch?
Vishen Lakhiani	You build them from scratch, and you build them in one day. There is no 'I'm currently doing' in my company; it is done or not done. We give you the method, the AI tool and the system, so you have a ready-to-go signature method on your website in a day, then adapt it as you learn.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Diana: how exactly does the guidance work for building out systems and frameworks?
Vishen Lakhiani	I or Daniel teach on Tuesday; a facilitator turns that into an implementation protocol and training files for your AI; on Friday you install them, fill in a questionnaire, upload your book transcript or best speech, and the AI produces the finished asset. I'm building a 14-day autoresponder live right now in about five minutes, something that took me a week last year.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Judy: my husband and I are co-founders. Can we attend under one enrolment?
Vishen Lakhiani	It's tricky because every student has one profile in the directory, like a university. I've asked my team to set up a discount for genuine business partners and spouses.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Paula: how long is the AI available to you?
Vishen Lakhiani	For the four months, and you can download the content as MD files and put it into your own AI. You control it and there is nothing you are locked into.
Audience question (read by Vishen Lakhiani)	Linda: I did Entrepreneurship Mastery last year. Should I join this one, and how does it differ from Social Media Mastery?
Vishen Lakhiani	There is some overlap with Entrepreneurship Mastery, so previous students will be contacted about a discount for that overlap. Social Media Mastery is completely different: that is reels and charisma; this is platform, structure, marketing and product design.

“Authority is not talent, it's not luck, it's a method. Authority is a method.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“Why I think this happens is I think when people see fancy edits, it feels like an ad, but if they see a simple edit, it feels real.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“It's either not done or it's done. And I train everyone in my team to build lightning fast and develop it in one day.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“All of us are a media company of one. You're the media company for your product.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“I hate being busy. I hate overwork. In fact, I just don't like work at all. I want to get massive results in the least amount of time.”

Vishen Lakhiani

What was announced

Vishen restated the Expert to Authority Mastery: four months (October to January), 18 weeks, 36 live sessions covering 18 topics, with a 90-minute teaching call and a 60-minute implementation lab on Fridays at 9am Los Angeles / 12pm New York / 6pm Amsterdam / 8pm Dubai / 9.30pm Delhi / midnight Singapore, recorded, with roughly three further hours a week suggested for implementation. He teaches about two-thirds of it, with Daniel Priestley, Jimmy Naraine, John Lee and Ajit Nawalkha as guest teachers and periodic appearances from Mindvalley authors; each student receives a companion AI (cost covered for the four months, content downloadable afterwards) and access to the premium community. The kickoff is a 'Build Your AI Intelligence' skill-pack session with Vishen on Friday 25 September, for which an AI subscription (Claude, ChatGPT or similar) is required. Stated price: $4,999, or $1,499 over four months, with Mindvalley members paying $4,499, and a one-click full refund available at any time in the first two weeks; those enrolling by 11.59pm Los Angeles on Monday 21 September were offered a flagship-course workshop with Jimmy Naraine. Vishen also announced an application-only mastermind (referred to on Day 2 as the Expert Guild) for experts earning at least $100,000 a year from their own teaching or spokesperson role: about 90 members, each sharing one test or insight a month, plus a monthly advanced lesson from Vishen and participation from Mindvalley authors, priced at $10,000, or $12,000 combined with the Mastery, with details to follow by email and a dedicated presentation later in the week.

Your next steps

1. Write down the belief 'authority is a replicable method' and list the specific things currently stopping you (mindset, phraseology, no flagship course, funnel, masterclass, quiz or email sequence).
2. Pick one asset you have been 'currently doing' and finish a first version of it in a single day, then improve it from there.
3. Check your own product page for founder visibility: your name, your face, your signature and your story should be unmistakable.
4. If you are considering the programme, download the full week-by-week overview that was shared, confirm you have an AI subscription, and decide whether the Mastery or the application-only mastermind fits your current revenue.

LIVE DEMOS • VISHEN LAKHIANI • HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

Conversion Hacking: Live Demos with Vishen

Vishen Lakhiani took you inside real Mindvalley funnels to show that the money is in the arrows, not the boxes: every arrow on a funnel diagram is a conversion number you can test and improve. Working live, he built an autoresponder sequence in the background while teaching, redesigned a masterclass landing page with AI, showed an AI simulating and grading funnel tests, and finished with the conversion rules that matter most: clarity, credibility and honest urgency, with the headline doing 70 to 80 per cent of the work. Jason Goldberg then closed the summit with a story about permission and one final exercise.

KEY IDEAS

- The arrow, not the box. On a funnel diagram most people look at the products (the boxes); the arrow between a 3-minute video and the website is the percentage of viewers who click, and conversion hacking means improving those numbers. If the sign-up rate on a webinar page doubles, revenue more or less doubles. First case, the Quantum Jumping flagship course page: published in 2008, 96,000 students, still doing millions a year, and the author's children still receive royalties. The page looks plain because fancy versions were tested and lost; adding one simple box lifted sales by about 7 per cent. A good flagship course is a long-term asset, like a book.
- Case: building the funnel around the flagship. The mistake is driving free content and ads straight to the paid course. Instead put the course in the middle and send traffic to a free offer, testing two: a webinar and a free email lesson (typically a 14-day sequence). Both produce leads, both point leads to the course, and everyone who does not buy still lands on your author list, which you email about once a week.
- Case: Sonia Choquette's website. Clear sections (start here, programmes, certifications, community), a 'send me the kit' free intuition meditation kit, a thank-you page that delivers the promised meditation plus a Barking Dog Meditation PDF, and a simple, slightly off-centre training video shot on a basic tripod. Sonia found that one or two emails a week was the sweet spot; more emails did not raise revenue, and fewer made each one more valued. From that trust she directs people to certifications, community, consulting, VIP events and mentoring.

- Case: the CoursePro autoresponder, generated in the background while Vishen taught. Every email in the sequence was written in a couple of minutes, in his and Jimmy Naraine's voices, pulling the best stories from the course (one subject line: 'The course I sold to almost nobody'). His estimate for a whole flagship build: outline the course in a day, record at roughly two hours per finished hour, and assemble the entire funnel in weeks with no extra staff. Build and deploy, often the same day.
- Case: redesigning a masterclass landing page. Vishen gave his AI page tool the existing page, asked it to apply conversion psychology and the best conversion patterns, and handed it a design template link. The goal was one number: webinar page to lead, from a 43 per cent sign-up rate towards 50 per cent. Rather than testing the one new version against the control, he asks for five variants, has the AI test them against simulated users, then tests only the winner against the control: what used to be months of work, done in about an hour for a few dollars in AI credits. The key input is a description of your customer: Vishen showed the file built from attendees' own hopes and goals; with that, the AI predicts what will sell, right down to pricing. He cited the founder of Eight Sleep replacing an email team with an AI now running a 100-million-dollar-a-year channel.
- Case: the AI funnel stack. A funnel-analysis AI runs simulations across offers and sequences on around 10,000 simulated users and recommends what ships today; it refused one variant because it broke a customer promise. Its page templates go to a copywriting AI trained on the leading copywriters, then to a page-building AI trained on the product portfolio, which produced a complete upsell page needing only a cover image and a video embed. The system also grades human work: it gave one of the team's tests a C and caught an FAQ still describing a monthly plan that had been removed.
- The average funnel converts at about 2.35 per cent, and visitors decide in 3 seconds. Only three things move a user: is it clear, is it credible, is it urgent. Run a 5-second test: show your page to a stranger and ask what it offers and who it is for. Credibility comes from social proof, authority markers and specificity (real numbers such as 24,574 stories, never made-up ones). Urgency must be real: a class that starts on a date, a bonus that ends at 11.59pm, never a fake 48-hour timer that is still up at 72 hours.
- The headline does 70 to 80 per cent of the work. On the Silva Ultramind site, nothing beat 'Why do some people have it all while others stumble and crawl?' for five years. Test the headline before anything else. And fix your calls to action: never 'Submit', 'Click here' or 'Learn more'; use 'Start my free trial', 'Get my free guide', 'Yes, I want in', 'Claim my spot', 'Watch the webinar'.

Clarity, Credibility, Urgency

1. Clarity: the quality of your copy; a stranger can say what the page offers and who it is for within 5 seconds.
2. Credibility: testimonials, social proof, authority markers and specific real numbers.
3. Urgency: a genuine reason to act now (a start date, a real deadline), never fake timers.

Conversion hacking with AI

1. Map the funnel and pick one arrow to improve (for example webinar page to lead, 43 per cent to 50 per cent).
2. Give the AI your current page, your customer description and a design template, and ask it to apply conversion psychology.
3. Ask for five variants, not one, and let the AI test them against simulated users.
4. Test only the winning variant against your live control with real users.
5. Feed the results back so every test makes the system smarter, then repeat.

THE CONVERSATION

- Jason Goldberg Vishen's going to take a real funnel and tear it apart, stage by stage, to show you exactly what you should be looking at to keep testing and optimising. How many people land on your page and sign up versus bounce? How many who sign up for your masterclass actually show up? Most experts have no idea where their funnel is leaking.
- Vishen Lakhiani Welcome back, everyone. This has been the summit where I've been teaching the longest. Most people look at these boxes, Lifebook, Soul Collection. But really, the most important thing is not the box, it's the arrow. The arrow represents a conversion number.
- Vishen Lakhiani Am I going to put this version up and test it against the control? No, it's a waste of time. I'm going to ask the AI to create five more versions, test those five against itself with imaginary AI users, and then test the winner against the control. That's five months of work done in one hour.
- Audience member AI can't do as good a test as real users.
- Vishen Lakhiani You're right, that's why we're still testing with real users. But I'm pushing the AI, because the cost is minuscule, to give me not one variation but five. It forces the AI to think better. And if you give it a file describing your users, their hopes and dreams, it predicts what would sell, all the way down to pricing.
- Jason Goldberg Grab whatever you've been using to take notes and circle that one thing, the idea you can't stop thinking about. Then put a date next to it for when you're actually going to do something with it. A day becomes a week, a week becomes a month, a month becomes a year.

"The businesses that win aren't the ones that have the best funnel, they're the ones who test the fastest."

Jason Goldberg

"Show your landing page to someone who's never seen it. Ask them, what does this page offer? Who is it for? If they can't answer in 5 seconds, you have a clarity problem."

Vishen Lakhiani

“Real urgency. The class starts on this date, therefore you have to sign up before the class starts.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“I don't want you wasting months building your optimal funnel. I want you doing it in days. And then making money for months.”

Vishen Lakhiani

“If you don't have a plan for Monday, you don't have a plan.”

Jason Goldberg

TRY THIS

- Run a 5-second test: show your landing page to someone who has never seen it and ask what it offers and who it is for. If they cannot answer, rewrite for clarity.
- Audit your funnel arrows: write down the conversion number for each step (content to page, page to sign-up, sign-up to show-up, show-up to purchase) and pick the one leak to fix first.
- Rewrite every call-to-action button on your pages from 'Submit', 'Click here' or 'Learn more' to a first-person outcome such as 'Get my free guide' or 'Claim my spot'.
- Summit close: circle the one idea from these three days you cannot stop thinking about and write a date next to it for when you will act on it. If you do not have a plan for Monday, you do not have a plan.

Your next steps

1. Draft two headline alternatives for your main page and test them before changing anything else.
2. Check every urgency claim on your pages is true (a real start date, a real deadline) and remove anything fake.
3. Set up one free offer (a webinar or a free email lesson) between your content and your paid course, and start a weekly email to your list.
4. Do the one-thing-with-a-date exercise and put that date in your calendar today.

VIP Q&A • VISHEN LAKHIANI • HOSTED BY JASON GOLDBERG

VIP Q&A with Vishen

In the closing VIP session Vishen sits beside Jason Goldberg for a round of five-minute website hot seats followed by rapid questions. You get worked examples for an artist, a pre-revenue fasting coach and a grief coach, then direct answers on founder-led versus company brands, boutique practices, first offers without testimonials, building assessments, funnel build order, small-language markets, tech stack, self-improving AI projects and ethical selling to a traumatised audience.

KEY IDEAS

- Art, like expertise, sells on story and likability. The Mona Lisa became famous because it was stolen, not because it was the greatest painting; Bert Goldman sold pieces for $10,000 because people followed his creative process and liked him. Engineer fame, tell the story of every piece, and educate the buyer instead of just showing the work.
- Lived experience beats credentials for most consumers. Eric Edmeades built WildFit on the story of living with the Hadza bushmen, not on a nutrition degree; what you do need for credibility is customer stories, and you should always show your own face on the site.
- A gentle product ladder for a sensitive niche: a five-day autoresponder that teaches, a quiz that identifies the right-fit client, an affordable mini course, a booked call, and later a weekly one-to-many class, all built around one signature method. Start with low call prices because every early call is training wheels and market intelligence.
- Always build the authority around the founder, not the company. Virgin has a few hundred thousand followers and Richard Branson has millions; Diary of a CEO is dwarfed by Steven Bartlett. People follow people, and founder-led marketing is a gift to the thing you built.
- Scale does not have to mean a 50-hour week. The system is a tap you open as far as you want: AI, agencies or talented people do the heavy lifting while you design your day, whether that means 20 hours a week or a Tuesday spent walking the dog.
- Your first offer without testimonials should be an 'unbeatable offer': your best work at a no-brainer price (free, $1, $3), with a stated reason for the price. Cialdini's photocopier study showed people comply when they hear a 'because', even if the reason is trivial; explain why the offer is so good or people suspect a catch.
- Give AI real data and it will design what you would not have asked for. Seven hours of raw scientist interviews plus the instruction to act as a world-class supplement marketer produced a full website, a quiz built in an hour, an e-book and an autoresponder, with the human in the loop supplying the truth.
- Build order for a funnel: flagship course first, then whichever entry funnel suits you. The email funnel is easiest (course transcript into AI), the quiz is next (you may need to record an interview), and the masterclass is hardest only because you still have to record it; the only edit it needs is captions.
- Train your AI projects to improve themselves. Start with a real problem in a plain conversation, correct the first output, then ask 'what did you learn, and how would you update your instructions and project files?' Vishen's page-building project has been revised 14 times in two weeks this way.
- Never manufacture urgency or fake scarcity, for a traumatised audience or anyone else. Ethics and reputation matter more than money in the bank today; if a countdown banner is not true, it does not run, and your marketing should carry the same compassion and safety as your delivery.

Visibility playbook for an artist or maker who won't reveal technique

1. Engineer fame and likability through PR and a social channel tied to the website
2. Tell the story behind every piece: one video of the making, one interview-style video (a podcast mic and speaking to air is fine)
3. Educate the buyer with the 'educate the reader' model: a report or quiz on choosing and placing art
4. Use AI to mock up the customer's own wall with several of your pieces so they can choose

Product ladder for a sensitive niche (grief coaching example)

1. Five-day email autoresponder teaching one principle a day, each email inviting the reader to find out if you are right for them
2. A quiz that pre-qualifies the right-fit client by type of loss, age and situation
3. A short mini course (five to seven days, $99 to $149) bought automatically
4. Book a call at your hourly rate, starting low while each call teaches you the market
5. A weekly one-to-many class ($99 to $499) as demand grows, all built around your signature method

The unbeatable offer

1. Put your best foot forward: a genuinely valuable asset such as a 20-minute meditation or audio lecture
2. Price it as a no-brainer: free, $1, $3 or $5 (a token price often increases perceived value)
3. Give the 'because why': explain why it costs so little so people don't suspect a catch
4. Tell them exactly what to do with it and what the next step is (listen three days in a row, then book a call)

Funnel build order

1. Build the flagship course first, always
2. Email funnel next: feed the course into AI and the sequence is produced
3. Quiz: fast to build, but you may need to record an interview to give the AI real material
4. Masterclass last: after the script you still have to record it; skip heavy editing and add captions only, with a good voice, mic and camera

Building a self-improving AI project

1. Open a plain AI conversation and state a real problem you're trying to solve
2. Correct the first output: tone, humour, language, what doesn't sound like you
3. Ask 'what did you learn from this?'
4. Ask it to produce a new instruction set and project files so it does better next time, and repeat after each use

THE CONVERSATION

- Jason Goldberg First hot seat: Ann, an artist who doesn't want to reveal her core technique, so pillar videos and lead magnets don't seem to fit. What replaces the weekly video as her central system for reach, collector relationships and repeat sales?
- Vishen Lakhiani I was a black-and-white photographer myself, so I love artists. Art is about story: the Mona Lisa became famous because it was stolen. I'd engineer fame and likability, tell the story of every piece on social media (one video of the making, one interview-style video even if you're speaking to air), teach how to beautify a space, and let people upload a photo of their wall so AI mocks up six of Ann's pieces in their living room. No other artist is doing that, and it's one prompt.
- Jason Goldberg Kim is pre-revenue with 13 years of personal intermittent fasting practice but no coaching credential. Is that enough, and how does she teach lived experience she has never sold?
- Vishen Lakhiani People don't come to a site looking for a coaching certificate or a medical degree. Eric Edmeades was a film producer and speech coach; the story of living with the Hadza bushmen built WildFit's credibility. Most consumers don't care about credentials; what you need are customer stories, and Kim should show her picture, because not doing so is a big red flag.
- Jason Goldberg You can learn more about alcoholism from a recovering alcoholic than from someone who studied it in school.
- Vishen Lakhiani Exactly. I met an author who never studied alcoholism, is a recovering alcoholic, and wrote a best-selling book on giving up drinking.
- Jason Goldberg Justin is a grief coach, best-selling author and 30-year professional musician who uses songwriting as a healing method. He believes grieving people won't pay for coaching and that belief is capping his business. How does he test it, validate demand and build authority in the grief niche?

- Vishen Lakhiani First, the website is all about the music; there's nothing on grief. Don't just say 'hire a grief coach'. Start with a five-day autoresponder on dealing with grief where each email teaches a principle and invites people to see if Justin is right for them, then a quiz that identifies the right-fit client, then a $99 to $149 mini course, then a booked call, and as demand grows a weekly one-to-many class at a reasonable price. Start call prices low, because every call is intelligence. And, as Jason added, all of it is built around one signature method that runs the entire ladder.
- Jason Goldberg David asks whether to build authority around the founders or around the company as a category and philosophy, and what to leave in the background.
- Vishen Lakhiani Always the founder. Virgin employs 50,000 people and has a couple of hundred thousand followers; Richard Branson has millions. Diary of a CEO is small next to Steven Bartlett. People follow people, not companies, so if you're a founder you should be the figurehead, and that's a gift to the thing you built.
- Jason Goldberg Michelle says everything here points at massive scale and she doesn't want it: a boutique practice, 20 hours a week, she hates social media. Can she scale on email and AI alone?
- Vishen Lakhiani What she's really saying is she doesn't want a 50-hour week, and that's a damn good goal. The way I teach, AI, agencies or talented people do the heavy lifting while you design your day. If Tuesday is walking the dog through Hyde Park and three matchas without opening a laptop, good on you.
- Jason Goldberg It's like a tap: you decide how far to open it, and it's the same system either way. Laura has no testimonials yet. How does she design a first offer that attracts 100 people, delivers measurable results and turns into real proof, or is that what the free offer is for?
- Vishen Lakhiani It's the unbeatable offer: relative to the price, fantastic, your best foot forward, a no-brainer. It could be free or a dollar; sometimes people value it more when they pay something. But if you charge a dollar, explain why, or people wonder if you're stealing card details. Cialdini's photocopier study showed people let a stranger cut the line simply because he gave a reason; they don't even hear the reason, they just want to know there is one.
- Jason Goldberg Daryl asks: you build the flagship first and then the assessment around it, but how do you actually build the assessment?
- Vishen Lakhiani Let me show you the quiz on my supplement brand's site; the whole thing was built in one hour with Claude. We recorded about seven hours of interviews with the scientist behind the formulas, gave the AI the raw audio and told it to act as a world-class supplement marketer, and it came up with the quiz, the science page, the e-book and the autoresponder on its own. It didn't make anything up; the human in the loop supplied the data.

- Jason Goldberg Karolina has five days to connect a book, assessments, coaching and results into one working funnel. What does she build first and what does she leave?
- Vishen Lakhiani Flagship course first, always. Then a quiz, an email funnel or a masterclass, depending on what you're good at. Email is easiest because the course goes into the AI and the funnel comes out; the quiz is next but may need an interview; the masterclass is last only because you still have to record it. Don't edit it like YouTube: a good voice, mic and camera, and captions, which CapCut adds automatically.
- Jason Goldberg Flavina's courses are in Papiamentu, spoken by about 500,000 people. Can she scale in that language and still use AI?
- Vishen Lakhiani Yes. Modern models have analysed almost every language with websites, and my children's mother tongue is Estonian, spoken by just over a million people, where everything runs on AI. It will work.
- Jason Goldberg I have a Romanian client whose entire Claude is in Romanian and it all works. Dr Wala Mohamed isn't ready for a custom site; what stack does she choose so she isn't rebuilding everything in two years?
- Vishen Lakhiani Framer is a really good one for AI-built websites, and building sites is now very easy. You can also have Claude or the new ChatGPT design the site directly; all you need then is hosting, and services like Vercel make that simple.
- Jason Goldberg Yesterday you had an analysis running on Sylvie's website. Can we pull it up?
- Vishen Lakhiani Found it. It did a technical analysis, ran simulations and suggested the optimal funnel to boost her revenue, but said there was too little information because her site is two pages, so it produced a set of questions for her, like how many weeks a year she works. That's how you use Claude: don't just say 'rebuild my website', ask it to ask you clarifying questions. Sylvie can drop the three files into her own Claude and literally ask 'what do I do with this?'
- Jason Goldberg Anez asks: when you're building an AI operating structure from scratch, what are the first three to five things you map out before creating agents or your environment?
- Vishen Lakhiani I don't map first. I open generic Claude and ask it to solve a real problem, like the TikTok script for a grumpy 50-year-old, correct it until it sounds like me, then ask what it learned and have it write new instruction and project files so it does better next time. My page-building project is on version 14 of its instructions after two weeks; every time I use it I ask what it learned.
- Jason Goldberg Notice he started with a problem he was trying to solve, not a grand outline of everything to set up. Katharine asks whether she can use this to make her executive clients into authorities in their industries.

- Vishen Lakhiani Absolutely. Everything you learn from me you can use on other people; that's how I worked with Marisa Peer and Regan Hillyer. And once you've built an AI project that creates an autoresponder for one client, doing it for client two or client one hundred is easy, so you're also getting a business in a box.
- Jason Goldberg Miles's audience is recovering from trauma and he doesn't want to manufacture urgency around their pain. How do you convert while keeping it psychologically safe and ethical?
- Vishen Lakhiani Never manufacture urgency, for trauma or for anything. Ethics and reputation are more important than money in your bank today. Be extra gentle: give the meditation or advice away or charge a dollar and explain why, make the course affordable, then a call. When marketers show me that a fake 'three days left' banner lifts sign-ups, I ask whether it's true, and if it isn't we don't run it.
- Jason Goldberg Your marketing should match your deliverable: if the delivery is compassion, care and safety, the marketing should show the same.
- Vishen Lakhiani Exactly.

"Art is about story. The Mona Lisa is not the greatest work of art. It was the work of art with the best story, because it was stolen."

"People follow people. People don't want to follow companies. People want to follow people, like, that's who we follow."

Vishen Lakhiani

"When you just start, you bring the price low, because every call is also giving you intelligence."

Vishen Lakhiani

"Never manufacture urgency. Never, ever, ever, ever, ever do that. Ethics and reputation are more important than money in your bank today."

Vishen Lakhiani

"People don't even hear the reason. They just want to know you have a reason."

Your next steps

1. Put your own face, name and story on your homepage and replace at least one product description with the story behind it.
2. Draft your unbeatable first offer: the asset, the token price, the 'because' that explains it, and the exact next step you want people to take.
3. Sketch your ladder in the order Vishen gave: flagship course, then email funnel, then quiz, then masterclass, and start with the flagship.
4. Take one AI project you already use, ask it what it learned from your last session and have it rewrite its own instructions.

YOUR NEXT STEP

You have the frameworks. Now build the business they describe.

Three days gave you the map: the brand, the products, the machine that scales. The Expert & Authority Mastery is where you build it. Eighteen weeks live with Vishen Lakhiani and the teachers you met this weekend. One lesson and one workshop every week, so each framework becomes a finished asset in your business before the next one begins.

Doors are open now. The cohort starts in October 2026 and enrolment closes when it begins.
